Aunt, uncle face murder allegations

KSP: 9-month-old Christian County boy died from abuse

FROM NEW ERA STAFF REPORTS

A 9-month-old boy who police allege was abused by his aunt and uncle died Thursday, according to Kentucky State Police.

The KSP confirmed Friday that the Christian County boy, Jack Stark, died late Thursday night at Vanderbilt Children's Hospital in Nashville, Tenn.

Stark was flown to the hospital Tuesday after suffering injuries consistent with abuse, according to a previous KSP news release.

At about 8:40 p.m. Tuesday, authorities received a call about an unresponsive infant at 105 N. Cavalcade Circle in southern Christian County. The boy was taken to Blanchfield Army Community Hospital at Fort Campbell and later flown to Vanderbilt.

Through an investigation, police determined the child had injuries consistent with abuse, the release said.

Police arrested the infant's aunt and uncle, Christopher and Joni Leutwyler, at their home on Thursday.

The couple was originally charged with first-degree assault, domestic violence and first-degree criminal abuse on a child under 12 years old. Authorities are looking to upgrade those charges to murder, an updated release said.

The investigation is ongoing. Both Christopher and Joni Leutwyler are being held at the Christian County Jail.

Sen. Pendleton vows to still push for hemp

Legislation won't be passed this year

BY DENNIS O'NEIL
NEW ERA FEATURE WRITER

With only one day remaining in the legislative session, industrial hemp production is still illegal in Kentucky. Still, Sen. Joey Pendleton, D-Hopkinsville, doesn't plan on giving up the fight to legalize the controversial crop.

"I'm going to keep on until we succeed," said Pendleton, who the past two years has sponsored bills in the Kentucky General Assembly to legalize hemp production.

Senate Bill 41, which Pendleton filed this year, would have established a licensing procedure for farmers to grow hemp. Under the bill, farmers would have had to pay a $150 licensing fee and $5 per acre grown with a limit of 30 acres.

Bills were also filed in the Kentucky House in support of hemp production. Pendleton testified in support of the bills during March hearings with the House Agriculture Committee. The bills did

Navy jet crashes into Va. apartments

VIRGINIA BEACH, Va. (AP) — Emergency crews searched the charred remains of a Virginia Beach apartment complex Friday after a fighter jet crashed into it just after takeoff in what Navy officials called a “catastrophic mechanical malfunction.”

Two Navy pilots — a student and an instructor from nearby Naval Air Station Oceana — ejected just before the jet careened into the apartment complex, demolishing sections of some buildings and engulfing others in flames. Some 40 apartment units were damaged or destroyed in the crash, but hours later no fatalities had been reported.

Seven people, including both pilots, were taken to a hospital. All except one of the pilots were released by late afternoon.

Virginia Beach Fire Department Capt. Tim Riley said more than two dozen residents remained unaccounted for, although all but the six most damaged apartments had been searched.

“What I’m praying for, what I’m thinking about now is that we don’t find any more victims,” Virginia Beach Mayor Will Sessoms told reporters.

The two-seat F18 Hornet had dumped loads of fuel before crashing, though it wasn’t clear if that was because of a malfunction or an intentional maneuver by the pilots, said Capt. Mark Weisgerber with U.S. Fleet Forces Command. The jet went down less than 10 miles from Oceana.

Bruce Nedelka, the Virginia Beach EMS division chief, said witnesses saw fuel being dumped from the jet before it went down, and that fuel was found on buildings and vehicles in the area.

The plane not having as much fuel on board “mitigated what could have been an absolute massive, massive fireball and fire,” Nedelka said. “With all of that jet fuel dumped, it was much less than what it could have been.”

The crash happened in the Hampton Roads area, which has a large concentration of military bases, including Naval Station Norfolk, the largest naval base in the world. Naval Air Station Oceana, where the F/A-18D that crashed was assigned, is in Virginia Beach. Both the pilots were from Virginia Beach, Weisgerber said.

Weisgerber said he did not know how many times the student pilot had been in the air, but that the instructor was “extremely experienced.”

Dozens of police cars, fire trucks and other emergency vehicles filled the densely populated neighborhood where the plane crashed. Yellow fire hoses snaked through side streets as fire crews poured water on the charred rooftops of brick apartment houses. By late afternoon, the fire had been put out.

Residents of the apartment complex described a confusing scene and an apologetic pilot.

Colby Smith said his house started shaking and then the power went out, as he saw a red and orange blaze outside his window. He ran outside, where he saw billowing black smoke and then came upon the pilot as he ran to a friend’s home.

“I saw the parachute on the house and he was still connected to it, and he was laying on the ground with his face full of blood,” Smith told WVEC-TV.

“The pilot said, ‘I’m sorry for destroying your house.’”

Smith said he and another man

US job market takes a break

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. job market took a breather in March after its best hiring stretch since the Great Recession.

Employers added 120,000 jobs last month — half the December-February pace and well short of the 210,000 economists were expecting. The unemployment rate fell from 8.3 percent in February to 8.2 percent, the lowest since January 2009, but that was largely because many Americans stopped looking for work.

Still, few economists expect hiring to fizzle in spring and summer, as it did the past two years. And they blamed seasonal factors for much of Friday's disappointing report from the Labor Department.

“We don’t think this is the start of another spring dip in labor market conditions,” said Paul Ashworth, chief U.S. economist with Capital Economics.

The report was also closely watched in political circles. If employers retreat on hiring, consumers could lose confidence in the economy and potentially dim President Barack Obama's re-election hopes.

Ashworth and other economists cited the weather for the latest jobs report. A warm January and February allowed companies to hire workers for outdoor jobs a few weeks earlier than usual, effectively stealing jobs from March. It partially explains a 34,000-job drop in retail hiring and a 7,000 drop in construction jobs.

“Our winter didn’t really exist,” said Alan Amdahl, who runs his own construction company in Sioux Falls, S.D. “It’s just incredible. People didn’t hibernate.”

Economists also say the numbers can bounce around from month to month. Consistently creating 200,000 jobs a month is tough. The economy hasn’t put together four straight months of 200,000 or more new jobs since early 2000.

Economists are still encouraged by the recent hiring trend: The economy has generated an average 212,000 jobs a month from January through March.

Anthony Chan, chief economist at JP Morgan Wealth Management, noted strong growth among businesses that are especially sensitive to the economy's health. Hotels and restaurants hired 39,000 workers. Manufacturers added 37,000.

The factory hiring is especially welcome. Expanding factories create more jobs at the mines that produce raw materials, in warehouses and at trucking companies and at utilities that generate power.

Government jobs, which declined by an average 22,000 a month last year, fell just 1,000 in March. An improving economy is generating tax revenue and easing budget problems at city halls and statehouses across the country.

Md. high court hears lesbian divorce case

ANNAPOLIS, Md. (AP) — Maryland routinely grants divorces for couples who married in other states, and divorces for same-sex couples should be no different, lawyers for a lesbian couple told the state's highest court Friday.

The case involves two women who were married in California and denied a divorce in 2010 by a Maryland judge who said their marriage was not valid in the state.

Maryland does not currently allow same-sex weddings, but lawyers for the women told the seven-member court that it would be unprecedented for the state not to recognize gay marriages performed elsewhere.

“If you’re validly married somewhere else, the rule in Maryland is your marriage is going to be respected in Maryland, and that’s what we’re asking the court to do here,” said Shannon Minter, legal director for the National Center for Lesbian Rights in San Francisco.

Judges in Maryland have been inconsistent about granting divorces for gay couples. Lawyers said judges have granted divorces for about half a dozen gay couples, but their clients and at least two other couples were denied. As a result, some couples are waiting for a ruling from Maryland's high court before filing for divorce, the lawyers said.

The Court of Appeals' ultimate decision may have limited effect because same-sex weddings, and by extension divorces, are set to start in the state in January. Opponents of the law passed this year are seeking to overturn it in a potential voter referendum. The Maryland Marriage Alliance says it has collected 20,000 of the nearly 56,000 signatures needed to get the issue on the ballot.

The high court's judges asked about that potential referendum and its effect on the current case. Lawyers said the outcome of any referendum was not relevant. They said it will only address whether voters want to allow same-sex marriages in Maryland, not whether the state should recognize same-sex unions performed elsewhere. Even if voters decide not to allow same-sex marriages, state courts should grant divorces for same-sex couples, the lawyers said. They cited Wyoming and New Mexico as states with similar practices.

Mayor orders Occupy Louisville out of park

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Louisville Mayor Greg Fischer has denied Occupy Louisville's request for a permit to stay in a downtown park and ordered protesters to leave by April 13.

The city's director of codes and regulations, Jim Mims, sent the group a letter saying it has made Founder's Square inaccessible to the public and that several "altercations" have been disruptive.

Fischer's spokesman, Chris Poynter, says the park has "in essence become a homeless camp." Poynter said the city has received complaints from citizens and businesses in the area, and that about $7,000 in damage has been caused to the grass.

When asked what will happen if protesters don't leave by the deadline, Poynter said: "We're hopeful that they will. We want to do this in a very compassionate way, so working with the Coalition for the Homeless to help get people into shelters who want to go there."

Protester Lorrie Neal told The Courier-Journal that a Louisville police officer visited the encampment Thursday with the letter and she plans to leave.

Activist Curtis Morrison, who is running for the Kentucky State Senate in District 35, said Fischer is trying to get rid of the encampment before Kentucky Derby events begin.

"Scattering the homeless is hiding the symptom, not treating the disease," Morrison said. "Hiding us won't make our problems go away. It's frustrating (Fischer) doesn't get that."

Attorney Chris Harrell, who represents the group in a lawsuit, said the litigation is pending and it is up to Occupy Louisville to decide whether to press on with the case.

Occupy Louisville is an independent offshoot of the Occupy Wall Street movement, which is protesting corporate greed and the influence of money in politics.

Thomas chides colleagues for too many questions

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — Maybe it's Southern courtesy or his introverted nature that keeps him from interrupting attorneys during oral arguments, Supreme Court Justice Clarence Thomas said Thursday evening.

Whatever the reason, the Georgia native had a blunt assessment about the rapid-fire questioning from some of his colleagues during recent hearings on the nation's health care law. The queries weren't helpful to him in deciding the case, he said.

And Thomas suggested his loquacious colleagues should do more listening and less talking.

"I don't see where that advances anything," he said of the frequent questions. "Maybe it's the Southerner in me. Maybe it's the introvert in me, I don't know. I think that when somebody's talking, somebody ought to listen."

His remarks drew applause from the audience that heard Thomas' insights on the court during a 90-minute appearance at the University of Kentucky. A relaxed Thomas answered questions from UK's law school dean, a law professor and a leading UK law school alum.

Thomas has gained a reputation for staying silent during oral arguments before the high court.

He said the lawyers presenting their cases are capable and don't need guidance from the justices: "I don't need to hold your hand, help you cross the street to argue a case. I don't need to badger you."

Thomas was asked specifically about the plethora of questions during three days of oral arguments as the justices decide whether to kill or keep President Barack Obama's health care overhaul. But Thomas said it's become habit for justices to interrupt lawyers.

"We have a lifetime to go back in chambers and to argue with each other," he said. "They have 30, 40 minutes per side for cases that are important to them and to the country. They should argue. That's a part of the process."

"I don't like to badger people. These are not children. The court traditionally did not do that. I have been there 20 years. I see no need for all of that. Most of that is in the briefs, and there are a few questions around the edges."

But Thomas also praised the "decency of the institution," saying the high court has remained immune to the courteseness of public discourse. He said he counts his fellow justices as friends, liberals and fellow conservatives alike.

"I've yet to hear the first unkind word spoken in conference," Thomas said.

No matter the subject — whether it delves into abortion, the death penalty, free speech or other divisive issues — the justices are steadfast in reviewing the case with mutual respect, he said.

More soldiers return to post

CLARKSVILLE, Tenn. — A detachment of U.S. Army soldiers has returned to Fort Campbell from Afghanistan.

The Leaf-Chronicle reported 53 members of the 101st Finance Management Company arrived at the post on the Tennessee-Kentucky border just after 3 a.m. Friday.

The return marked the end of a yearlong deployment.

Sgt. Vitalia Sanders dropped to one knee to greet her 2-year-old daughter Lianna, who came running to her. Sanders' husband James was close behind.

Meantime, the Tennessee National Guard announced Thursday that about 100 Guard members from Russellville and Jefferson City were expected to arrive at Smyrna on April 11.

The members of the 190th Engineer Company arrived Thursday at Camp Atterbury, Ind., for processing.

More than 27,000 Tennessee Army and Air National Guardsmen have deployed since Sept. 11, 2001.

Local students to attend Gatton Academy

FROM NEW ERA STAFF REPORTS

Two students from Christian County and one from Trigg County were recently accepted into the Carol Martin Gatton Academy of Mathematics and Science out of Western Kentucky University for the 2014 school year.

Across 37 state counties, 50 high school sophomores were chosen to attend the academy, according to a WKU news release.

Elizabeth Dade, of Christian County High School, Trey LaChance, of University Heights Academy, and Kassy Harris, also of UHA, were the three local students picked out of 280 applicants. The students will finish junior and senior high school years living on WKU's campus and taking courses offered by the college.

By the end of high school, the students will have earned at least 60 college credits. In addition, students can take part in clubs, organizations, community service and faculty research, according to the release.

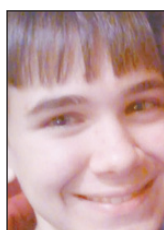

Three out of four Gatton students also participate in study abroad programs in Costa Rica, Italy, Greece, England, China or Morocco.

"Their experiences will be the flagstone in these young people's pursuit to lead Kentucky in the 21st century," said Corey Alderdice, assistant director of admissions and public relations at Gatton.

In March, 51 candidates were interviewed by Gatton staff members and Kentucky representatives. In Kentucky, the

Beshear urges passage of prescription drug bill

BY ROGER ALFORD

FRANKFORT, Ky. — Gov. Steve Beshear joined forces with a bipartisan group of Kentucky leaders Thursday to push for passage of a bill intended to curb prescription drug abuse in a state where more people have been dying from overdoses than car wrecks.

Lawmakers have one last shot at passing the bill when they return to Frankfort next Thursday for the final day of the legislative session.

"Every day that we delay strengthening our response to prescription drug abuse is another opportunity for a Kentuckian to fall victim to this devastating scourge," Beshear said in a statement. "Our law enforcement officers, our medical licensure boards, and our communities are desperate for new tools to attack this epidemic."

Beshear's office distributed statements Thursday from a bipartisan group of Frankfort political senators, including Republican Senate Floor Leader Robert Stivers, Democratic House Speaker Greg Stumbo and Democratic Attorney General Jack Conway. 10-foot python caught in LBL

Animal abandonment is dangerous, officials say

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GOLDEN POND, Ky. — Land Between the Lakes officials are warning people not to drop off their unwanted pets in the recreation area after a 10-foot albino python was found.

LBL spokeswoman Nicole Hawk said everything from snakes to goats have been dumped at the 180,000-acre area that lies between the Cumberland and Tennessee rivers in Kentucky and Tennessee. Dropping off the animals there poses a danger to wildlife and could threaten visitors, she said.

"It's definitely an issue with our wildlife and public safety," Hawk told The Paducah Sun.

The albino was found slithering around Wednesday. It was taken to an animal rescue center.

Rescue Hamilton, head of the Trigg County Humane Society, said she tries to place any animal rescued from Trigg County or LBL. While she mostly sees dogs and cats, she's rescued some horses.

"Some people bring them in and try to play cowboy and catch them," Hamilton said. "Some don't get caught. The bad thing is at night, unlike cattle or deer, a horse looks away from oncoming headlights, so you don't get that glow. If a horse gets hit by a car, it'll be killed, and maybe kill the driver, too."

Gil Lawson, director of communications for the Kentucky Department of Parks, said state parks such as Pennyryle Forest and Lake Barkley have reported more abandoned pets.

Hamilton said owners who are unable to care for animals may think dropping them off in the park is a better option than a shelter which might euthanize an animal if not adopted. She believes most of these animals are condemned to starve, be hit by a car, suffer from disease or become food for predators.

"If you have to give up a pet, at least a shelter will treat it humanely, and give it a chance to be placed," Hamilton said.

Hamilton added the best way to help unwanted pets is to avoid acquiring one that cannot be supported.

"If you need to find a shelter, look for a no-kill facility if possible," Hamilton said. "Remember, there are rescues on the Internet, and you can always find a place that will advertise a pet that needs a new home."

UK-themed egg takes second place

BY CARLA JIMENEZ
NEW ERA STAFF WRITER

Lela Hale calls it "The UK Fabergé."

The egg, barely bigger than a football, took part in a decorated egg contest Friday afternoon for the employees at Jennie Stuart Medical Center. Hale and the 20-member Health Information Management Department team decorated the egg. In the midst of the typical Easter bunnies and chicks, the department wanted to create something unique and different.

"One of the girls in the office came up with the (UK) idea," she said. "It was right before the championship game, and we were pretty sure we were going to win."

Hale said that no one person can take responsibility for the egg; it was a team effort, and everyone had different ideas to contribute. The receptionist came up with the idea of making it similar to a Fabergé egg. Another co-worker drew the design, and someone else painted it. Hale said that the only man in the whole department was a UK expert, and "we even got his blessing." She called the team "The House of HIM," named for the department and the original makers of Fabergé eggs.

DRUG: Gov. urges passage of bill

Tilley, led the push. The legislation would put the attorney general's office in charge of the state's prescription monitoring system that can identify doctors who overprescribe painkillers, which could give prosecutors fast access to information that could lead to arrests and prosecutions. The monitoring system is now operated by a state social services agency. Kentucky has one of the nation's highest rates of prescription drug overdose deaths, and public opinion polls show that one in three Kentuckians has a relative or close friend who abuses prescription drugs. "This legislation is an important step in our effort to fight a problem that kills more than 1,000 Kentuckians each year," Conway said in a statement. "I'm hopeful everyone, including the medical community, can get on board." Stumbo said the legislation is crucial. "Given the true epidemic we are seeing, we cannot afford to wait another year to try to pass this again," he said. Under the legislation, all doctors would be required to use the prescription monitoring system, known as KASPER. It also would require that pain management clinics be owned by a physician licensed in Kentucky. That's an effort to root out "pill mills" run by operators who have little or no medical expertise but are doling out massive amounts of painkillers. The legislation also would require medical licensure boards to open immediate investigations into complaints about overprescribing. "The heartbreaking statistics speak for themselves," Stivers said in a statement. "The diversion of prescription drugs and illegal uses of prescription drugs are serious issues facing the commonwealth. This directly affects families, jobs, and the well-being of communities." The legislation is Senate Bill 4.

UK: Wildcat egg takes second place

The UK Fabergé took second place in the egg competition. It lost out to an egg with a more religious theme. "It was pretty," Hale said. "It had 'Christ is Risen' across it, and they put mini-Christmas lights (on it)." But Hale remains biased. "I thought ours was the bomb," she said. The future of the egg remains unsure. Everyone in the department would like to take it home, but no one can split it. So instead, the department wants to get the egg signed by Coach Calipari and his victorious UK basketball team, after which they can donate it to the Rotary auction. Hale said the department has high hopes. In the meantime, the egg rests in the Health Information Management Department. "Anybody can come see it if they want to," Hale said.

National PTA seeks to revitalize membership

(AP) — When Otha Thornton, president-elect of the National PTA, signed up to help lead the PTA at Maryland's Meade Senior High School in 2005, the chapter had about 25 members. Within two years, membership soared to 400 as the school community mobilized to boost morale and academic performance. Now he's trying to rekindle that spirit on a larger scale as the PTA strives to reverse a steady decrease in its national membership.

"I tell parents: 'Other people are making choices for you and your children. We need you at the table,'" said Thornton, who will become the National PTA's first male African-American leader next year.

By any measure, the PTA is one of the most venerable and iconic of America's volunteer-based nonprofits. It was founded in 1897 as the National Congress of Mothers and at its peak in the 1960s claimed about 12 million members.

Membership plummeted in the late '60s and 1970s, in part because of the racial rifts caused by school desegregation, then stabilized. But it has dropped steadily over the past 10 years from about 6 million to under 5 million.

Demography is part of the reason: Compared to the PTA's heyday, there are many more single parents and working mothers now who feel they can't spare extra time for engagement at their children's schools.

But the PTA's shrinkage can't be explained only by such factors, given that parents are active at tens of thousands of schools in independent parent-teacher organizations not affiliated with the PTA. Factors driving this trend include frustration with having to pay state and national PTA dues, and disenchantment with the PTA's role as a vocal advocate on such issues as charter schools, juvenile justice and home-schooling.

"We're still strong, but it is a concern," the current national president, Betsy Landers, said of the membership decline. "We've chosen to try to attack it in several different ways."

One initiative involves expanded use of social media. Members are being kept up-to-date via podcasts on National PTA Radio, some meetings and training sessions are being conducted through Skype, and members with expertise as bloggers or tweeters are being recruited as "social media ambassadors" to enhance the PTA's online presence.

Landers, of Germantown, Tenn., hopes these tactics will help cut costs while also enticing more parents to join.

"We're really trying to give our members the information they seek in a way they prefer," she said.

Thornton, a retired Army colonel who now works as a senior analyst for General Dynamics in Georgia, said other membership-boosting strategies include encouraging urban parents to be more involved in their local schools, expanding outreach to rural schools, and training a new wave of leaders from minority groups.

For Thornton, 44, his PTA mission is intertwined with his family history — a Georgia family that refused to let borderline poverty derail the quest for college education.

"Education was a way out," Thornton said. "When I had kids, it was very important for me to be involved and be sure they got the best education possible."

While Thornton and Landers say the PTA needs to be creative with new membership strategies, one change that's not on the cards is any backing away from the PTA's role as lobbyist on behalf of children and public schools. Among many causes over the years, it has campaigned for better nutrition in school cafeterias, fought to sustain arts programs, called for more empathetic treatment of juvenile offenders, and voiced wariness about school vouchers and for-profit charter schools.

"Advocacy is really the heart of what we do — we're seen as the go-to people on parent engagement," said Landers, who's been active in the PTA since 1989.

She said the PTA's full-time lobbyists on Capitol Hill are reinforced by a vast network of members nationwide who, when mobilized by email, will contact their own members of Congress.

"Any association that takes a stand, there will always be some members who disagree," Landers said. "Any stand we take is decided by membership ... It's not made by staff, not made in Washington. It's made by the grass roots."

For some parents, however, the PTA's advocacy work is cause for annoyance rather than pride.

"I don't feel the PTA's mission and our mission are the same," said Gary Parkes, president of the PTA at Carmel Elementary School in Woodstock, Ga. "Parents think they're joining to be involved with the kids at their school, and they're really becoming part of a massive political action committee."

President Barack Obama speaks Friday at the White House Forum on Women and the Economy.

Whose heroes? Obama invokes Republican icons

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Barack Obama is embracing an unlikely group of political icons as he tries to paint Mitt Romney as extreme: He's praising Republican presidents from Abraham Lincoln to Dwight Eisenhower and Ronald Reagan.

The Democratic president typically offers up GOP leaders of the past as evidence of how both parties can work together in Washington to pursue big ideas and rebuild the economy. With Election Day seven months away, Obama hopes to persuade voters that he, like his Republican predecessors, is a reasonable moderate. At the same time, he's casting Romney as a candidate who would embrace too-conservative policies out of step with most Americans and with their own party in years past.

Obama invoked Reagan's name four times in a speech this week to The Associated Press annual meeting. He said the conservative hero, never accused of being a "tax-and-spend socialist," still recognized the need for tax increases as well as spending cuts to tame federal deficits. Obama's verdict: "He could not get through a Republican primary today."

Painting Romney as an ideological extremist might seem a somewhat curious strategy for Obama given that the GOP nomination front-runner has been considered the moderate candidate in the Republican primary field and has struggled to consolidate support among conservatives in the party. But Obama's team hopes to define Romney in a negative light before the former Massachusetts governor has a chance to pivot toward the general election and emphasize his past positions that could appeal to moderates of both parties and the independent voters who can decide close races in polarized America.

Obama has cited Reagan more than 40 times in speeches and public events since 2009, according to an analysis of public statements and transcripts by the AP. But Eisenhower is Obama's favorite Republican for name-dropping — the president has referenced him more than 90 times. Lincoln is right behind with 80 mentions in public comments covered by the transcripts.

Among Democrats, Obama has cited Bill Clinton more than 60 times and Franklin Delano Roosevelt 45 times at public events. Jimmy Carter? Four times.

Romney, taking the same stage as Obama this week, a day later, told editors and publishers that the president was wrong. Reagan, he said, "would win handily in a primary, frankly, in all the primaries," if he were running today. Romney accused Obama of "setting up a straw man to distract us from his record."

Romney and his team say the president is trying to hide the fact that he's a liberal who has promoted government programs instead of individual opportunity — the antithesis of Reagan. Obama, these Republicans contend, has failed to bridge partisan differences so he must resort to rhetoric at a time when people care more about the economy and gas prices.

On the flip side, Democrats see the drawn-out Republican primary and rise of tea party conservatives in 2010 as prevailing currents pushing Republican candidates away from the political center.

At fundraisers and in speeches, Obama often plays history professor, using Lincoln, Eisenhower and others to try to make his case.

Lincoln, Obama frequently notes, launched the transcontinental railroad and the National Academy of Sciences — efforts, he says, that mirror his own attempts to rebuild the nation's economy and know-how. Obama points to Eisenhower's role as the father of the Interstate Highway System and reminds people that Richard Nixon, hardly a darling of liberals, created the Environmental Protection Agency.

HEMP: Sen. Pendleton vows to continue pushing legislation not receive a vote during the session. Pendleton's bill in the Senate didn't receive a hearing.

Most of his bill's opposition, Pendleton said, came because of hemp's similarities to marijuana. The two crops contain tetrahydrocannabinol, or THC, the main hallucinogen that gives marijuana users their "high." According to a report from the University of Kentucky, marijuana cultivars typically contain between three and 15 percent THC while hemp only contains trace amounts of less than one percent.

Pendleton appeared at a hemp seminar in Hopkinsville during the legislative session to educate citizens about the crop. During the seminar, Christian County Sheriff Livy Leavell expressed support for legalizing hemp. He also discussed ways local law enforcement would monitor the crop's producers should it be legalized.

Pendleton said he has encountered law enforcement officials who aren't as supportive, and plans on offering more seminars throughout the summer to educate them about hemp. The crop is legal in more than 30 countries including Canada, France, Germany and Great Britain. Pendleton thinks its legalization would produce at least 17,000 new jobs immediately in Kentucky and generate $400 to $500 million in revenue for the state.

Hemp can be used to produce textiles, paper, biodegradable plastics and ethanol. It was produced in the U.S. throughout the 18th and 19th centuries and later as part of the war effort during WWII. U.S. production ended in 1958 and the crop has since been policed under the federal Controlled Substances Act.

The UK report states that Kentucky was a major producer of hemp during the antebellum period. Pendleton, a former farmer, thinks Kentucky has an ideal climate and soil type for hemp production. He said the crop requires much less fertilizer to cultivate than crops like corn, wheat and soybeans. It also requires no herbicides or pesticides, he said, making it more environmentally friendly.

Some local farmers are skeptical about the crop's viability, though. Christian County farmer David Wimpy attended Pendleton's Hopkinsville seminar to educate himself about hemp. He felt there wasn't enough research presented about the crop's potential profitability or its cost for production. He said there needs to be more research done before farmers can consider growing hemp.

Dale Seay, another local farmer who attended the meeting, echoed Wimpy's sentiments, saying farmers need to know potential market prices for any crop before committing to it. "Farmers are not even going to consider it until they can determine cost per acre and production," Seay said. "You don't want to raise a crop and say, 'I'm not sure what we are going to get for it.'"

Seay does think the crop could be a benefit to burley tobacco farmers in the area. Burley farmers, he said, are only getting about $1.80 per pound for their product compared to $2.50 or $2.60 per pound for dark-fired tobacco, which Seay grows. Seay said the decline in the U.S. burley market has happened in the past few years as tobacco companies have started purchasing the product overseas.

Along with the low market prices, Seay said the cost to produce burley is going up, making it even less profitable for farmers to grow it.

Brian Lacefield, who offers loans to farmers through the local cooperative Commonwealth Agri-Finance, thinks hemp would be a useful alternative to tobacco farmers. Tobacco contracts, he said, are only offered on a year-to-year basis, making it difficult for a farmer to plan his operation in the long term. While he doesn't think hemp would compete with tobacco, Lacefield said having it as a supplemental crop could benefit farmers.

Lacefield indicated more research would be useful in pursuing hemp production.

"You have to figure out what the market will be for it," Lacefield said. "Right now with corn, wheat and beans, we have a long history. We have to know what price we are going to receive at harvest."

Kentucky is one of eight states in which hemp production is legal for research purposes. Potential growers must secure a permit from the Drug Enforcement Administration for production. UK applied for a permit in 2001 but was denied. The college hasn't reapplied though Pendleton said he has spoken to them about the possibility. Thus far, Hawaii is the only U.S. state to secure a permit.

Nancy Cox, associate dean of research for UK's College of Agriculture, said that until recently, they hadn't heard much of a public desire for the college to reapply for a permit. She couldn't speak specifically about the college's plans, but said if legal impediments were removed, they would be prepared to research the crop.

The most recent hemp research from UK is a pair of studies published in the late '90s exploring the crop's economic implications. One study published in 1998 projected that if 90 Kentucky counties produced hemp, approximately 17,348 jobs would be created and $396 million in worker earnings would be generated.

"Who is to say that something that was viable 10 years ago is viable today?" Wimpy asked. "I want to see more research on it."

Nationally, Texas Republican Rep. Ron Paul introduced a bill in May 2011 that would exclude industrial hemp from the definition of marijuana in the Controlled Substances Act. The bill has been referred to a committee in the U.S. House for discussion.

Pendleton's bill stipulates that Kentucky must adhere to all federal laws regarding hemp production. He hopes that if enough states legalize the crop though, there will be pressure for the federal government to change the law.

Pendleton plans on sponsoring a new hemp bill during next year's General Assembly.

"I'd like Kentucky to be proactive instead of reactive," he said. "I don't want us to be the last state that says 'We can (grow it)' and all the rest of (the states) have started planting and have factories coming in. That hinders our farmers and hinders the industry from coming in here."

Lawyers ask court: Throw out Fort Hood bomb plot confession

KILLEEN, Texas (AP) — Attorneys for a soldier accused of planning to bomb a restaurant filled with Fort Hood troops want his confession thrown out.

Army Pfc. Naser Jason Abdo's attorneys filed motions Thursday in federal court in Waco. One seeks to toss out any evidence obtained when he was arrested last summer.

The Killeen Daily Herald reports that Abdo's attorneys claim investigators denied him access to an attorney and did not read him his Miranda rights before he confessed.

Abdo was AWOL from Fort Campbell, Ky., when he was arrested in July at a Killeen motel near the Texas Army post.

Abdo faces up to life in prison if convicted of attempting to use a weapon of mass destruction and eight other charges. His federal trial is set for May.

5 indicted in case of Ohio woman's dismemberment

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — The live-in boyfriend of a western Ohio woman whose dismembered remains were found in her bathtub has been indicted on aggravated murder and other charges.

The Champaign County grand jury indicted Matthew Puccio and four others Thursday on charges related to the March death of 21-year-old Jessica Rae Sacco.

Andrew and Kandace Forney of Fenton, Mich., and Christopher Wright and Sharon Cook of Urbana, Ohio, also were indicted in the case. Police say they stood by and did nothing as Sacco was killed and helped Puccio cut off or transport limbs.

Puccio, 25, is accused of stabbing Sacco, placing a plastic bag over her head to suffocate her and dismembering her in their Urbana duplex apartment. Police say some of her limbs were dumped in southwest Ohio and Kentucky, about 70 to 85 miles away. Her landlord found other remains in the bathtub on March 30, eight days after authorities believe she died.

Puccio could face up to life in prison if convicted.

The suspects are scheduled to appear in court Friday. Puccio is being held in the Tri-County Regional Jail in Mechanicsburg on $100,000 bond. The others are being held at the jail on bonds of $50,000 each.

Their attorneys did not immediately return telephone messages seeking comment.

Puccio has said Sacco begged him to kill her after he confronted her about text messages she'd sent saying she wanted him dead.

Sacco had lived in California in recent years. Puccio said they had been together for about a year and a half and that the relationship started going sour about two months ago.

Along with aggravated murder charges, Puccio faces charges of felonious assault, felony gross abuse of a corpse and misdemeanor abuse of a corpse, tampering with evidence and possession of criminal tools.

Andrew Forney, 26, is charged with gross abuse of a corpse and abuse of a corpse, tampering with and complicity to tamper with evidence, obstructing justice, failure to report a crime and possession of criminal tools. His wife, 25, is charged with obstructing justice, failure to report a crime, possession of criminal tools and complicity to tampering with evidence.

Wright, 37, is charged with gross abuse of a corpse and abuse of corpse, tampering with evidence, obstructing justice and failure to report a crime.

Cook, 25, is charged with failure to report a crime, complicity to gross abuse of a corpse and to abuse of a corpse, complicity to tampering with evidence and complicity to obstructing justice.

Health stats bring focus to county's problems

A new national report that quantifies several health factors for every county in the United States outlines a dismal picture of Christian County. It boils down to this: Kentucky is the eighth least healthy state in the country, and Christian County ranks along state averages for most health statistics.

Like the rest of Kentucky, our county has high rates of smoking and drinking. There's too much fast food but not enough exercise. Too many children live in poverty, too many people die young and too many people die in car crashes. The rates of sexually transmitted diseases are well above state averages. The social support network is inadequate to help people deal with these problems.

OUR OPINION

Where does this community even begin to tackle the problems?

First, let's recognize that health, education and economics are entwined. Each one affects the others. In recent years, many of Christian County's most influential organizations and individuals have invested their time, talent and resources to address problems in education and the economy. It's time for the county's health to rise to the same level of local consciousness. We cannot cast off concern for health and expect to make gains in education and the economy.

The Christian County Health Department correctly identifies three things this county can support to improve health: a smoking ban for indoor public places, the creation of hiking trails and public transportation. City council and fiscal court should pass smoking bans, and the city should move as quickly as possible on the rail-trail project. Plans are already under way for public transportation buses. The chamber and others involved in the Christian County Cares 2015 vision plan should address health more in long-range strategies.

The health department alone cannot steer improvements in the county's health. There are other valuable resources at St. Luke Free Clinic, Jennie Stuart Medical Center and physician practices to help educate the public. Local government and media and the Christian County Chamber of Commerce also have a role. The hospital is the largest and most valuable of these local institutions in terms of its ability to lead positive change for health. We should expect no less from a local hospital.

Christian County cannot afford to ignore the community's poor health any more than we afford to discount the impact of low expectations in education.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Saturday, April 7, the 98th day of 2012. There are 268 days left in the year.

On this date:

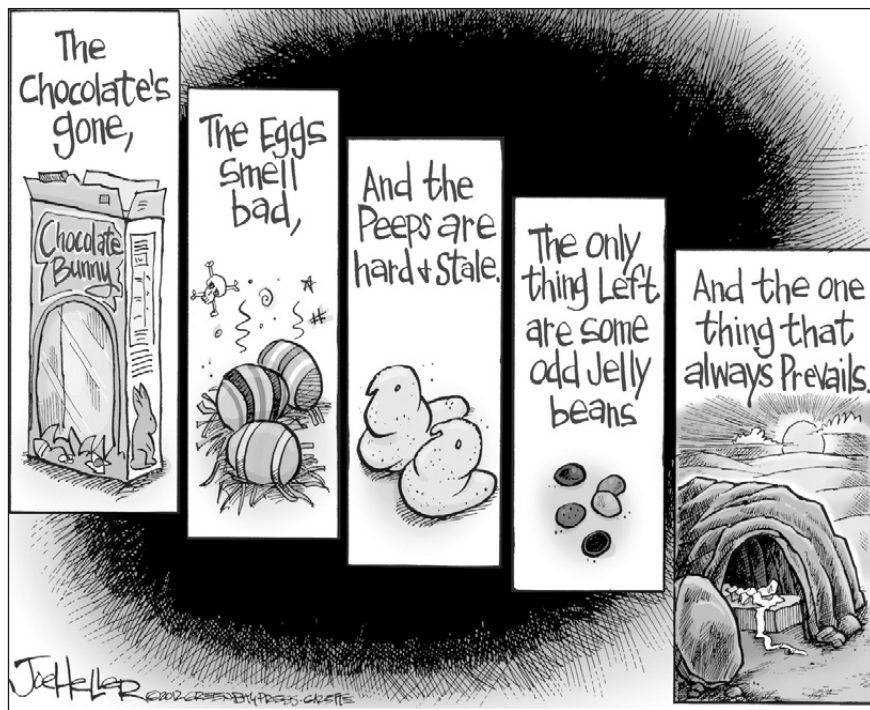

In 1798, the Mississippi Territory was created by an act of Congress, with Natchez as the capital.

In 1862, Union forces led by Gen. Ulysses S. Grant defeated the Confederates at the Battle of Shiloh in Tennessee.

In 1948, the World Health Organization was founded in Geneva.

In 1978, President Jimmy Carter announced he was deferring development of the neutron bomb, a high-radiation weapon.

In 1983, space shuttle astronauts Story Musgrave and Don Peterson took the first U.S. space walk in almost a decade as they worked in the open cargo bay of Challenger for nearly four hours.

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE

Congressional spending cuts often target poorest Americans

The Editor, New Era,
I cannot comprehend or believe that Rep. Paul Ryan, R-Wis., (and many others like him in Congress) can be elected to such important political positions. I can understand and comprehend that many citizens would like to see Congress cut wasteful spending; even I, a liberal Democrat, have no problem with cutting wasteful spending. The problem, however, is that the do-gooders choose first to cut the spending that goes to the help-ots.

I will not try to argue or debate the morality of that. What I will argue, is the morality of more tax cuts for the wealthy. As I have said before, the wealthy are not paying their fair share of taxes now, and to give them additional tax cuts is down right immoral.

Somehow, the Paul Ryans in Congress think that people are only poor because they choose to be poor. The do-gooders say they want to teach the poor to pull themselves up by their own boot straps. Perhaps the do-gooders are sincere in their thinking, but I believe they only rationalize to cover their real reason: cut taxes for the wealthy.

People like Paul Ryan are not going to change their philosophy of taking care of the wealthy. No matter the cost to the rest of us. I do believe we less-fortunate should politically fight these feudal serfs of the wealthy. The fight will not be easy because the wealthy, with the aid of the Supreme Court, have bought the political process. However, we must not be complacent; the very least we can do is to let our voices be heard AND VOTE in every election.

Claiming personal responsibility in debate over US health systems

The Editor, New Era,
After reading the analysis of Obamacare and the Supreme Court in the Kentucky New Era on March 30, and hearing the pros and cons all over the news, it seems to me that there are fairly easy ways to fix the problems of high cost. First of all, people need to get over thinking that a pill can fix every thing that lifestyle puts off course. We all need less time in our easy chairs and more time on the move.

We have enough resources in our country that anyone who doesn't have a healthy diet goes overboard by choice. And the government doesn't need to provide nutrition classes because the material is all available if one is interested in a little research. Good nutrition is usually a pretty simple matter of having fruits and vegetables and plenty of water with a little meat and dairy products thrown in. And spices. Spices have many healthy qualities that medicines try to imitate.

It is easy enough to require insurance to cover all illnesses or go out of business. Since we regulate everything else, that could be regulated too.

Forget the campaign contributions by trial lawyers and get tort reform into place. There are too many people today wanting to live out of someone else's pocket. We can't fix everyone's problem, especially when they don't want to help themselves. Every time we have a frivolous lawsuit, many people pay the price and trial lawyers get richer on our dime, both in high cost of living and maintaining court facilities.

Cut the cost of drugs by getting rid of the lobbying payola and the cost of advertising. Educate the doctors but don't bribe them. We have all of the drugs come on the market that are going to cure the ills of the world then we find that they are killing people. ... People should realize that if a medicine is strong enough to cure one thing, it is strong enough to harm another part of the body.

The body was designed for hard work, and it is up to the individual to see that it gets it. It is also chemically balanced, most of the time, so anything ingested can bring about imbalance. A watchful eye on your own health and what is ingested is also an individual responsibility. ... We can't expect the government to know and care for everything. We all have the responsibility to do our best to take care of ourselves.

OP-ED

Beyond books, why libraries always matter

BY PAULA ELLIS, DEBORAH JACOBS AND JULIA STASCH

For many of us, the public library will always be synonymous with books. The books drew us to the library in the first place, helped us discover new worlds — both real and imaginary — beyond our day-to-day experiences.

Libraries continue to embody that same spirit of search and discovery, but in a manner that has been transformed as dramatically as the way we generate, share and consume information. They make this new digital era available to all Americans.

In Chicago, for example, an innovative space at the main public library called YOUmedia lets any teen with a city library card have in-house access to computers plus video and audio recording equipment to create their own content with the help of a mentor. At another YOUmedia space in Miami, workshops help teens think critically and creatively about their lives, by teaching them to publish an autobiographical digital story, or to visualize their favorite books. In a world where information is increasingly available, learning to analyze it, create it and make it your own is a valued skill.

For many teens, the library may be the only place they can get online and be connected to the digital world. They are in good company. One-third of Americans — mostly older, rural and or poor — lack broadband access at home and can't participate fully in contemporary life, much less in the $8 trillion global Internet-enabled economy.

Imagine the difficulty of finding work today without access to the Internet — especially when 80 percent of Fortune 500 companies only accept online applications. According to a University of Washington study, in 2009 an estimated 30 million people used public library resources as part of their job search, with half of them filling out applications or submitting resumes. Those figures have only increased as libraries across America have added services for job seekers.

Beyond providing access, librarians are helping Americans navigate the digital landscape. Classes focus on everything from how to operate an e-reader to how to publish your own eBook. Libraries in Alaska, Oklahoma and other states are adding video conferencing capabilities. Some libraries will even connect you with a digital mentor to strengthen your skills.

Library services are no longer only contained in the physical library. Book mobiles have been supplemented by mobile computer labs — visiting minority communities in St. Paul to teach digital literacy classes in Spanish, Hmong, and Somali, for example. In Dover, Mass., the library has installed QR codes around town that link signs at the market and playground to community information and services. Seattle Public Library offers live chats with librarians 24 hours a day getting answers to reference questions and live homework help.

The Knight, MacArthur and Gates foundations support public libraries because they help people acquire the skills to become lifelong learners, compete in the global economy and provide the knowledge to participate in civic life. Libraries are a good investment.

Yet some communities are cutting library budgets, forcing reductions in service just when Americans most need to deepen the digital and information skills that libraries foster.

This National Library Week, rediscover your library, as a portal to other worlds — and your own community. Check out all the library has to offer — and consider what you might have to offer it. It's no longer a place where you go to learn about someone else's past, but to create your own future.

FIRST AMENDMENT

States laws could reignite school wars on religion

Contrary to culture-war mythology, God is alive and well in many, if not most, public school. Visit almost any school in America and you'll find students sharing their faith, reading their scriptures, saying grace before lunch and, in high schools, meeting in religious clubs. But in a growing number of state legislatures around the country, lawmakers want more.

CHARLES HAYNES

Barred by the U.S. Supreme Court from turning the clock back to the days of state-sponsored prayers and devotional Bible reading, state legislatures are discovering creative new ways to get more religion through the schoolhouse door.

Last week, Florida Gov. Rick Scott signed a law encouraging local school boards to create a forum at school-sponsored events for students to offer inspirational messages. Although the state can't require students to give a prayer, critics of the legislation say "inspirational message" is a euphemism for prayer.

Beyond the murky legal issues, giving control of the microphone to student speakers strikes many school administrators as a risky business. Get ready for conflicts and lawsuits when some students offer Christian prayers, others pray Muslim, Wiccan or fill-in-the-blank prayers, and still others speak out for atheism.

Georgia, Texas, Tennessee and South Carolina already have "Bible bills"—and other Bible Belt states are likely to follow suit.

Bible literature and history can (and should) be part of the public school curriculum—but only if the material is taught objectively using scholarly materials. Most of the Bible bills, however, give little or no guidance on what safeguards schools should put in place to ensure that Bible courses are academic, not devotional. And little provision is made to prepare teachers or to provide scholarly resources for teaching about the Bible.

Prayer and Bible bills are part of a larger legislative effort by many conservative Christian groups and lawmakers to reverse what they see as a secularization of American schools and society that is hostile to (their) religion.

Religiously motivated opponents of evolution, for example, are pushing hard in many states for legislation that would require teaching the "strengths and weaknesses" of evolution and other topics they deem "controversial" in science. Louisiana passed such a bill in 2008. A similar bill was enacted by the Tennessee Legislature last month and awaits the governor's signature.

Critics of these bills charge that this nationwide effort to change science education is another attempt by the Christian Right to undermine teaching the well-established theory of evolution—and a backdoor way to promote religious views as science in public schools.

Over the past two decades, groups on the left and right managed to reach consensus on a range of issues, from the importance of teaching about religion to the necessity of protecting student religious-liberty rights.

But now groups on all sides are gearing up for new conflicts generated by state legislation that goes beyond the consensus by encouraging prayers at school-sponsored events, promoting problematic Bible courses, and sparking new debates over science education.

Welcome to the latest chapter in the long struggle over the role of religion in schools—an argument that dates to the founding of public education more than 150 years ago.

In the spirit of the times, let's call it school wars 4.0.

KENTUCKY GENERAL ASSEMBLY

Don't wait to pass pill mill legislation

On April 12, lawmakers will assemble for the last day of the 60-day session. While the General Assembly concluded the bulk of its work before leaving Frankfort last Friday, it left one of the most critical pieces of legislation for our state and communities uncompleted. The General Assembly has yet to pass House Bill 4, commonly referred to as the pill mill bill. The measure, which would provide oversight of pain clinics and greater monitoring of prescription drug abuse, has strong bipartisan support in both chambers and from the Governor. In addition, city officials from every corner of our state have advocated for passage of this legislation as essential to protecting the quality of life in our communities.

Prescription drug abuse is perpetuated in our communities through fraudulent pain management practices. These "pill mills" are set up almost overnight and quickly have drug users lined up around city blocks to get more pain medicine to abuse or sell. Right now, when the owners of the facilities sense they are under investigation, they can easily relocate in another community, delaying law enforcement action.

As the mayors of Kentucky cities, we see the slew of social and economic problems caused by prescription drug abuse. Theft, home invasions, robbery, increased violence, incarceration, expensive rehabilitation treatment, medical costs from overdoses and drug related injuries all threaten the safety of citizens and affect the bottom line for taxpayers. ... Many of our local businesses can't get enough workers who can pass a drug screening, and businesses who may consider locating here turn away at the sight of this pervasive drug abuse.

House Bill 4 would require all pain management centers be owned by licensed medical professionals or hospitals. The Kentucky Board of Medical Licensure would also be required to stop granting licenses to doctors charged for overprescribing in other states and immediately suspend licenses when doctors are indicted. It moves the Kentucky All Schedule Prescription Electronic Reporting (KASPER) system under the oversight of the Kentucky Attorney General, which gives law enforcement increased access to the data. Right now, law enforcement cannot see data regarding unusual prescribing practices. The bill requires more doctors to use KASPER before prescribing and outlines mandatory addiction awareness training. Additionally, it makes Kentucky a part of the interstate compact for state prescription monitoring programs.

Local leaders and citizens are relying on the General Assembly to take strong and decisive action on this issue right now. As pointed out by the Attorney General in a legal opinion last year, city and county governments lack the legal authority to impose local laws to eradicate this problem. Therefore, the burden falls squarely on the shoulders of the members of the General Assembly to ensure that this legislation is enacted and that it is not weakened to eliminate many of the important requirements, such as the immediate requirement for physician ownership of pain management clinics. This legislation is far too important for the future of our Commonwealth to be derailed or weakened by the Kentucky Medical Association or separate pain clinic interests. The General Assembly must remain resolute to keep Kentucky from becoming the pill mill capital of the United States.

If the members of the General Assembly fail to act with conviction on this legislation, they should untie the hands of local governments because local officials have the fortitude and courage to take bold action to save their communities from this scourge.

All citizens should join with their local officials in contacting lawmakers to urge enactment of strong legislation to address prescription drug abuse on April 12.

Methamphetamine measure advances

During even-year legislative sessions, no other bill gets more attention than the budget, which is understandable, because no other bill directs so many of the General Assembly's priorities. Even so, that doesn't undercut the importance of other legislation also set to become law, and as my colleagues and I prepare to wrap up the 2012 Regular Session this coming Thursday, there are more than a few of these bills that deserve mention.

Several, for example, will improve public safety, with two of the more prominent tackling the deadly rise of synthetic drugs and meth.

To cut back on the former, I proposed broadening the definition of these drugs, so that it will be much tougher for underground chemists to skirt the law by tweaking their formula. This bill will also crack down on those selling these poisons—often referred to as bath salts or synthetic marijuana—with potential penalties ranging from prison to forfeiture of their property. Together, this twin approach should give serious pause to any reputable store owner considering getting into this shady market.

The legislature's plan to limit meth, meanwhile, is designed to keep pseudoephedrine out of the hands of those that manufacture the drug while not hindering law-abiding citizens who depend on this medicine, especially during allergy season.

In this case, those purchasing without a prescription will be limited to 7.2 grams of pseudoephedrine a month and up to 24 grams a year. A standard box with 48 pills—each having a 30 milligram dosage—amounts to 1.44 grams, meaning families could still buy five of these boxes a month. It's crucial to note that this bill only applies to tablets; it does not affect gel tabs or liquid forms of pseudoephedrine, both of which are much tougher to use in manufacturing meth.

Another problem that is also costing us financially is the growing number of copper thefts. There have been numerous stories of air conditioners and other equipment being vandalized for the valuable metal they have inside.

Now, however, these thieves will find it much more difficult to turn their stolen goods into quick cash. Recycling centers will be limited in making these types of purchases, and payment will need to be made by check. These centers will also be required to register with the state.

In economic development, there were two bills to pass that hold a lot of potential for Kentucky. The first of those is noteworthy because it will help our business community avoid losing a federal tax credit worth as much as $600 million. This credit was at-risk if we didn't come up with a plan to pay off the interest on the federal money the unemployment insurance fund had to borrow to maintain benefits during the recession. Obviously, we could not afford to let that credit be dropped.

The other bill, meanwhile, will give Toyota, GM and several large auto parts companies the same opportunity to take advantage of the tax-incentive package that the legislature gave in 2007 to Ford, which then invested more than $1 billion and hired several thousand new employees at its Louisville operations. The other companies will have to invest at least $100 million to qualify, but the hope is this new law will give them another reason to take this step.

For our veterans and those still serving our country, the General Assembly passed several bills that will help them or honor their service. That includes setting up an adoption-assistance financial program for those in the National Guard—which could give them between $3,000 to $5,000 from the military family assistance trust fund—to laying the groundwork for a new memorial to honor those fallen Kentucky soldiers who have died in Iraq and Afghanistan.

Next week, I will detail several other new laws that were enacted this year, but in the meantime, don't hesitate to let me know your views on state government.

JOHN TILLEY, D-Hopkinsville, is the 8th District state representative.

COLUMNIST

Enduring trait of friendships

Overseas in 1943, and assigned to a company of soldiers mostly from the northern area of our country, I ran into Norman Fine, a New York Jewish soldier who was also pretty much isolated from his culture too. In a conversation with me, he pointed out that we had one thing in common and that was isolation from our own kind. He thought it might be an interesting thing to become friends and to share our widely divergent cultures.

I learned that his parents had fled from Russia before the Communist take over and that he had been a member of the communist party. He was about 23 at the time and I was astounded at his interest, membership, and participation in National and International political organizations. He was a good soldier and a loyal American, but his sophistication and knowledge of national and international politics amazed me.

Still he was interested in my own stories of life in rural Kentucky and he pumped me constantly for information. He was particularly interested in the family loyalties and the clan loyalties which I described to him. After a while, we found that we just liked to be together and that we had common ideas about the dignity and worth of most of our fellow men. I could not sing a note but Norm always wanted me to sing the Crawdad song to him, and he cherished my greeting of "what you reckon?"

Norman was highly educated with a prestigious engineering degree, but he was not well informed about American history or American culture outside of New York City. We came to view our friendship as a great learning experience for both of us.

The war ended and we went our separate ways. Fifty years passed and someone from my old army company rounded up information about old soldiers and sent me a list of my comrades with Norm's telephone number. I called Norm and when he answered, I sang a little of the crawdad song to him. When I asked him if he knew who was calling, he replied, what you reckon, Toby? Then he told me that he had often lulled his children to sleep with the crawdad son.

I soon sent him a long email and ... and, he corrected the mistakes in it and sent it back to me. We have stayed in touch since then.

There is nothing much more exciting or rewarding than a comfortable cross cultural friendship!

HHS claims district win over CCHS

BY KEITH JENKINS
NEW ERA ASSISTANT SPORTS EDITOR

Hopkinsville High School head baseball coach Jeff Gillespie's first taste of the Hoptown-County rivalry was a sweet one.

"Very impressive and very pleased," the first-year Hopkinsville coach said after his Tigers defeated cross-town rival Christian County 8-4 Friday night in a District 8 game at Tiger Stadium. "Great support in the community. It's good to see that on both sides."

The Tigers and Colonels will complete the home-and-home series at 1 p.m. today at Colonel Field.

"(I want to see) a carryover from tonight," Gillespie said of today's showdown. "We have a ninth-grader going for us in Keaton Scruggs. Hopefully we get a better start."

Clayton Smithson struck out eight and walked two in a complete-game effort to earn the pitching win for Hopkinsville. But the senior hurler dug himself into an early three-run hole.

Kentucky, Louisville look to capitalize on hoops success

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — Jump shots and rebounds might count for more than victories and Final Four appearances on two Kentucky college campuses.

Back on top of college basketball, the University of Kentucky now hopes to score big with prospective students and donors after basking in the limelight as its men's hoops team made its successful national title run.

"It helps us leverage our brand in all kinds of ways," UK President Eli Capilouto said in an interview this week.

The University of Louisville also hopes to capitalize on its most successful season in several years, which resulted in a Final Four appearance. The Cardinals were ousted by rival Kentucky in the national semifinals.

"There's no question that when you've got a successful athletics program, it gives you the opportunity to really market your academics," said UofL President James Ramsey.

Murray State, used to playing in the shadows of the two basketball powerhouses, saw its name recog-

The school in far western Kentucky figures it reaped millions in free publicity from its near-storybook regular season — the Racers were the last team in the country to lose. Applications for admission are up about 8 percent, and the school expects its sales pitch to get a boost from all the attention given its basketball team, said school spokeswoman Catherine Sivills.

AUGUSTA, Ga. (AP) — Before there was Tiger, Rory, Sergio or Phil, a smooth-swinging guy named Freddie used to make 'em go crazy at the Masters.

He can still make it interesting.

Freddie Couples turned back the clock Friday — back to 1992 — during a seven-birdie second round that coaxed a fist pump from the California-cool 52-year-old and put him in a tie for the lead with Jason Dufner at Augusta National.

"Can I win?" Couples said, repeating the question that so many are asking now. "Yeah, I believe I can. Yes."

He shot 5-under 67, the same score he posted 20 years ago during the second round of what turned out to be one of the most popular wins in the history of the tournament. Were it not for the gray hair beneath his cap, this might have been confused for a replay of that '92 win instead of the second round in 2012.

"Standing out there, I said, 'What the hell,' a lot. What do I have to lose here?" Couples said.

Meantime, Phil Mickelson made six birdies during a round of 4-under 68 to pull to 2 under for the tournament.

Tiger Woods had nowhere near as good a day. Struggling with his swing for the second straight round, he opened with two birdies on the first

CCHS powerlifter earns 3rd state crown

Christian County High School's Sam Kington became a three-time bench press powerlifting state champion two weeks ago at the state powerlifting meet at North Bullitt High School.

Kington, who transferred to Christian County this year from Madisonville-North Hopkins, narrowly missed being the overall state champion in the heavyweight class.

Kington was able to bench press 350 pounds.

Kings' Cousins fined for criticizing refs

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — DeMarcus Cousins has been fined $25,000 by the NBA for publicly criticizing officials after a 95-83 loss to Blake Griffin and the Los Angeles Clippers on Thursday night.

The NBA announced the fine Friday.

Cousins, a former Kentucky star, was constantly tangled up with Griffin in a matchup of two of the league's budding young big men. He was in foul trouble throughout, finishing with eight points and three rebounds before fouling out in the closing seconds.

Sacramento's second-year big man called Griffin an "actor" and said the league protects last season's Rookie of the Year and slam-dunk champion too much.

Griffin had 14 points and nine rebounds, making three shots in the final minutes to lead Los Angeles to the win.

The Clippers host the Kings today.

HHS: Tigers rally past Cols

Christian County's Clayton Baker tagged Smithson for an RBI-double to score Danny Johnson, and David Smith followed with a two-run homer to give the Colonels (5-7, 0-1) an early 3-0 lead in the opening frame of a rematch of last season's district title game.

Smithson got a run back for the Tigers (6-5, 1-0) in the bottom half, helping his own cause with a triple that brought home Jack Gardner who reached on a base hit.

But Christian County worked the bases loaded in the bottom of the second and Smithson plunked Baker to send in a run and give the Colonels a 4-1 advantage.

That would be the last run of the night for Christian County.

"We got complacent," Christian County coach Blake Leach said. "You can't do that. They're a good team and it showed. Somebody's got to be able to put a stop to it when a little rally goes. We did that a couple times, but in the end, we didn't do it."

Gardner, Hoptown's shortstop, tagged Colonels starter Logan Patterson for a stand-up, RBI-triple in the bottom of the third. That was the first of seven unanswered runs for the Tigers.

"We don't quit," Gillespie said. "We keep our poise and we play seven innings. We don't let an early lead like that get to us mentally. We just kept chipping away."

Josh Denton knotted the score at 4-4 on an RBI-single in the bottom of the fifth. The Tigers then took advantage of a Colonel error and a wild pitch by Patterson, and plated four runs in the bottom of the sixth to put the game out of reach.

Leach said he didn't feel as if he left Patterson in too long.

"I thought he was throwing just as hard as he was at the get go," Leach said of the junior hurler. "He just got some pitches up, and if you get them up, they're going to hit them. That's what happened and we just couldn't stop it."

Patterson struck out six and walked two in the loss.

Hopkinsville won its fourth straight game, while Christian County fell after earning two straight victories on the road.

Davis gets Wooden Award

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Anthony Davis of national champion Kentucky was on hand in Los Angeles to accept the John R. Wooden Award as the nation's top college basketball player.

The freshman was at Friday's ceremony to collect the last in a slew of player of the year awards he earned while helping the Wildcats earn their eighth national title.

Davis was a popular target for autograph hunters before the event at the Los Angeles Athletic Club.

He was announced as the Wooden winner during the Final Four last weekend in New Orleans.

Davis has had an eventful visit to the West Coast, with one of his suitcases getting lost on his way from Lexington, Ky, and meeting with Los Angeles Lakers star Kobe Bryant earlier Friday.

Davis is expected to be the top pick in this year's NBA draft.

Brittney Griner of undefeated national champion Baylor was the leading candidate to win the women's award, which was to be presented during the ceremony.

Kentucky center Anthony Davis, shown celebrating near the end of the NCAA championship game on Monday in New Orleans, was in Los Angeles Friday to collect the John Wooden Award as the nation's best college basketball player.

Errors help Caldwell Co. defeat Trigg

FROM NEW ERA STAFF REPORTS

The Caldwell County Tigers scored seven times in the bottom of the fourth inning and defeated Trigg County 10-7 Friday night in a high school baseball game in Princeton.

The Tigers took advantage of five Trigg errors in the frame and erased a 4-3 deficit.

Jordan Young picked up the pitching win for Caldwell (8-4), which has won four straight games.

Young (4-0) had plenty of offensive support from Justin Kelly, who had three singles and a triple to lead the Tigers' 15-hit attack. Tanner Vivrette, Bobby Waters and Bryce Boyd each had a pair of singles.

Zack Bridges suffered the pitching loss. He went four innings, striking out one and giving up three walks.

Trigg (5-10) scored three times in the second inning to take a 3-2 lead. After Caldwell tied the game in the bottom of the third, the Wildcats struck for another run in the top of the fourth. They added three more in the sixth but couldn't overcome the deficit.

Ben Wigand led Trigg with three singeles. Zach Snodgrass and Corbin Estes each had a pair of singles.

Trigg returns to action April 16 against Lyon County in the All "A" region tournament. Caldwell will play Sunday in Florida against Warren Central.

1 “SECOND TIER” TEAM NO MORE Ryan Newman’s win at Martinsville was the third for Stewart-Haas Racing this season. Newman’s teammate and co-owner, Tony Stewart, has two victories (Las Vegas, Auto Club). The organization can also boast eight wins in the last 16 Cup events dating back to the 2011 season. The victory was Newman’s first since July 2011 at New Hampshire Motor Speedway and 16th in his 11th full season in Cup competition.

2 BACK TO NORMAL Five weeks after rookie John King’s upset victory in the Camping World Truck Series’ season-opening race in Daytona, the favorites took center stage in Martinsville. Kevin Harvick dominated the Kroger 250 in Martinsville. Harvick led 248 of the 250 laps en route to his win in the No. 2 Richard Childress Racing Chevy. RCR rookie Ty Dillon led the other laps and finished second in his fifth career CWTS start.

3 NICE AND CLEAN The seven caution periods in the Goody’s Fast Relief 500 were the fewest in a Cup Series race at Martinsville since Sept. 1996, when seven cautions flew in an event won by Jeff Gordon.

4 CLOSE BUT NO CIGAR Dale Earnhardt Jr.’s last four Martinsville starts have netted finishes of seventh, second, seventh and third. Although Earnhardt has never won a Cup race at Martinsville, he has enjoyed 10 top-5 runs in 25 career starts and averages a 12.6-place showing. Earnhardt is one of only four drivers this year to have scored four top 10s in the six races, joining Greg Biffle, Jimmie Johnson and Martin Truex Jr. None of the four have visited Victory Lane this season.

Ryan Newman scores classic short-track victory in Martinsville

Ryan Newman takes the checkered flag following his win in the Goody’s Fast Relief 500.

Old Bristol or new? To race at Auto Club Speedway or not. Pack Racing vs. Tandem Drafting.

NASCAR fans often ask for better racing, more passing and added drama at most any current track. Ironically (or perhaps not), it’s NASCAR’s oldest active Cup Series facility that draws the least bit of venom from its hardcore fanbase.

Quaint little Martinsville Speedway, nestled at the foot of the Blue Ridge Mountains in Martinsville, Va., (population 14,428) hosted one of NASCAR’s eight sanctioned events in its inaugural 1949 season. And 63 years later, it still provides fans of short track stock car racing the most bang for the buck.

Although Jeff Gordon threatened to stink up the show in Sunday’s Goody’s Fast Relief 500, the crowded confines of the paperclip-shaped half mile did not disappoint.

Gordon and his Hendrick Motorsports teammate, Jimmie Johnson, combined to lead 440 of the scheduled 500 laps, but as with most Martinsville-hosted races, the dramatic conclusion trumped what was an otherwise tame race.

Gordon (328 laps led) and Johnson (112) engaged in a classic dogfight that resembled their April 2007 slugfest in Martinsville, racing door-to-door and trading paint as the laps wound down.

However, a caution flag thrown for David Reutimann’s stalled car bunched up the field for a green-white-checker finish. The Hendrick duo remained on the track while others pitted to retain valuable track position, but the move backfired.

On the restart, Clint Bowyer — with fresh tires — barreled into Turn 1 under Gordon and Johnson after taking a shot from Ryan Newman. That forced a three-wide situation that resulted in Bowyer, Gordon and Johnson spinning as Newman, AJ Allmendinger, Dale Earnhardt Jr. and others slipped through.

When the second “overtime” green flag waved, Newman took advantage of the quicker low line to hold off Allmendinger, Earnhardt, Matt Kenseth and Martin Truex Jr.

“We were probably an equivalent car to the 22 (Allmendinger) all day long,” Newman said. “We raced nose-to-tail for a long time and that’s why I chose the inside (lane) because I felt like that was the lane to have. Eight tires are always better than four, and I didn’t want to have to lean on AJ, and I didn’t, but if I needed to, then I could. It was just about knowing that that was the ideal line for me and my racecar.”

“I was really only worried about (Dale Earnhardt) Junior because I knew he would try to do the exact same thing Clint did because that’s what we all try to do. If eight (tires) are better than four, then 12 has got to be the best. It didn’t work out for Clint, but we always try.”

Understandably, Gordon and

Johnson — each in search of Hendrick Motorsports’ 200th Cup Series win — were searching for answers after the race.

“It’s just unfortunate that something stupid, last-ditch effort, dive-bomb or something along those lines wipes you out,” Johnson said. “But when you race long enough, you know that stuff happens.”

“My frustration — and certainly Jeff’s — is to be the class of the field all day long and be up front and have something stupid like this take us out,” Johnson said. “It is frustrating. We want to get this 200th win for Rick real bad and we could have been 1-2 today easily.”

Johnson ended the race 12th while Gordon ran out of fuel after the Turn 1 melee and settled for a 14th-place finish.

For his part, Earnhardt saw no malice associated with Bowyer’s aggressive move with two laps to go.

“The leaders had more than a hundred laps on their tires and the guys behind them had new tires at least on one side of the car,” the third-place finisher said. “And we all took off and ran in the back of the leaders — all of us.”

“So Clint went to the inside, and that was his prerogative, man. He was going for the win and I thought it was a good move. Just not enough room for all three of them down there in that corner and everybody got together.”

■ NASCAR and Goodyear will hold open tire tests at Michigan International Speedway and Pocono Raceway in June. Each track has been repaved since NASCAR’s last visits in 2011.

Teams will be given two days of testing (Wednesday and Thursday) at Michigan prior to the race weekend of June 8-10. Teams will have the Thursday before the June 15-17 race weekend at Pocono for the tire test.

■ Brian Vickers’ fifth-place run at Bristol has earned him more seat time in Michael Waltrip Racing’s No. 55 Toyota.

News & Notes

In addition to his runs at Bristol and Martinsville, Vickers was scheduled to pilot the car at both New Hampshire races, Bristol in August, and Martinsville in October. MWR has since added the two road course events — at Infineon and Watkins Glen — to his slate.

“Brian did such an amazing job at Bristol that we wanted to reward him with more races,” team co-owner Michael Waltrip said. “It has as much to do with how he interacted with (crew chief) Rodney Childers and the crew as what he did on the race track.”

ASP, Inc.

1. Tony Stewart	A pair of wins and a seventh-place showing in the last four races find Stewart and the boys sitting third in the point standings.
2. Greg Biffle	Biffle has to be happy to just get out of Martinsville — where he had averaged a 22.4-place finish — with a solid 13th and the points lead.
3. Dale Earnhardt Jr.	He’s not winning races yet, but consecutive third-place runs and top 15s in each race this season are a great sign. Of course, he did the same thing in 2008 prior to a second-half swoon.
4. Jimmie Johnson	Throw out the wreck-induced 42nd-place finish in the Daytona 500 — a wreck he did not cause — and Johnson has been 12th or better every weekend.
5. Matt Kenseth	On a weekend when Roush Fenway Racing was wholly out to lunch, Kenseth did what champions do: Make chicken salad en route to an unlikely fourth-place run.
6. Brad Keselowski	The victim of a questionable call by NASCAR when lining up the field during the green-white-checker restart at Martinsville, Keselowski deserved better than his ninth-place finish.
7. Martin Truex Jr.	Based on his performances in seasons past, it’s tough to buy into Truex’s early-season showing. Amazingly, his stats are better than Jimmie Johnson’s thus far.
8. Clint Bowyer	Bowyer’s aggressive dive bomb into Turn 1 at Martinsville ultimately cost him a shot at the win. Then his Jayhawks lost an NCAA title to Kentucky. At least he’s heading in the right direction in the standings.
9. Kevin Harvick	Expected a lot more out of the defending Martinsville winner last Sunday. Instead, it was a 19th-place stinker. Still, that run was by far his worst result of the season.
10. Ryan Newman	After two 21st-place runs to start the year, Newman has rebounded well — capped by Sunday’s win.
11. Carl Edwards	Inexplicably, Edwards still has yet to lead a lap this season.
12. Jeff Gordon	If it weren’t for bad luck ...
13. Denny Hamlin	For anyone else, a sixth at Martinsville would be acceptable. For Hamlin, it’s a missed opportunity.
14. Mark Martin	When he’s running, he’s running well. When he’s not, Brian Vickers is picking up the slack.
15. Kyle Busch	Uncharacteristically slow start for Busch, but he’ll rebound.
Just off the lead pack:	Jeff Burton, Joey Logano, Jamie McMurray, Paul Menard, Juan Pablo Montoya

Crew Chief’s Take: “Texas is all about downforce, and generating it in race conditions — with cars all over the track — is tricky, yet paramount. Speed at Texas is important, but so is a good shock and suspension package that allows the car to handle the bumps that have formed in Turns 1, 2 and 3. The exit of two and the entrance of three are the trouble spots, both from a driver’s and a mechanic’s perspective. It’s one of those places where, in my mind, strange things happen. I’m always extra wary when we go there.”

Classic Moments

Texas Motor Speedway

For the second straight year, Dale Earnhardt Jr. was the man to beat at Texas Motor Speedway, but unlike in 2000 — when he scored his first Winston Cup win — it was not to be.

Earnhardt was on cruise control until the caution waved with 21 laps remaining in the 2001 Harrah’s 500. A slow pit stop left him lined up ninth on the restart with lapped cars to the inside.

Johnny Benson Jr.’s James Ince-led team gambled on two tires during the stop and led the field to green with 19 laps to go. He held off a snarling pack consisting of Jeff Gordon, Kurt Busch, Dave Blaney, Dale Jarrett and Steve Park for 13 laps until Jarrett powered by off of Turn 2.

Jarrett pulled away from there, beating Park to the line by .703 seconds. Earnhardt finished a disappointing eighth.

Kurt Busch, in an unsponsored Roush Ford, notched his first career top 5. His No. 97 team landed Rubbermaid/Sharpie as the sponsor the following week.

Athlon Fantasy Stall

Looking at Checkers: No one can top Matt Kenseth’s 8.7-place average finish at Texas.

Pretty Solid Pick: Jimmie Johnson owns 12 top 10s in 17 TMS starts.

Good Sleeper Pick: Clint Bowyer’s new MWR team is cooking — and he’s typically good at Texas.

Runs on Seven

Cylinders: In seven Cup starts at TMS, Brad Keselowski averages a 23.7-place showing.

Insider Tip: Probably best to stick with a Hendrick, Roush or Stewart-Haas driver.

Hoppers' website running

BY JOE WILSON
NEW ERA SPORTS EDITOR

Anyone searching for information on the Hoptown Hoppers baseball team can now go to the team's website, www.hoptownhoppers.org, which is now operational.

Carter Hendricks, the Christian County Chamber of Commerce president and CEO and the president of an eight-member volunteer committee behind the Hoppers, announced Friday in an e-mail to the Kentucky New Era that the site is now live.

"The site features a player roster; board roster; team schedule, season pass information and a link to the Ohio Valley League," Hendricks said. "We are still making some changes and modifications."

Hendricks said closer to the season, which is scheduled to open June 1, a photo gallery and league standings will be added.

The Hoppers open the season June 1 at the Fulton Railroaders. The Hopkinsville team's first home game is June 6 against the Railroaders.

Other teams in the wooden bat league for college players include Owensboro, Tradewater (Madisonville) and Marion.

The Hoppers introduced their logo last week and already had released that Grayson Crawford, who coaches the Pensacola (Fla.) State college team, would be the manager. Finney Noffsinger is the team's general manager.

The team will play in June and wrap up the season with the playoffs the final week of July.

The roster, which includes two local players, Matt McGowan and Kyle Spencer, will have 24 players.

Hendricks said he still is looking for host families for some of the players.

911 caller: Petrino bleeding after crash

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. (AP) — A man who called 911 shortly after Arkansas coach Bobby Petrino was in a motorcycle accident says the coach and his female passenger declined to call the authorities.

In an audio file released Friday by Arkansas State Police, the caller said Petrino was bleeding in the face, but walking around. The caller said the passenger, who was later identified as Jessica Dorrell, didn't look like she was hurt.

Petrino has been put on leave after failing to disclose that Dorrell, a 25-year-old athletic department employee, was with him when he crashed Sunday. He also said the two had an inappropriate relationship.

The 911 caller, who identified himself as Larry Hendren, told a dispatcher: "The rider and the passenger of the motorcycle declined us to call 911. They got into a vehicle and headed toward the hospital."

GOLF

Dufner making a name for himself in majors

Jason Dufner hits on the 17th fairway during the second round of the Masters golf tournament Friday in Augusta, Ga.

AUGUSTA, Ga. (AP) — Jason Dufner didn't waste any time giving himself another shot in a major.

When last seen on a big stage, Dufner lost a five-shot lead with four holes to play and wound up losing the PGA Championship in a playoff. Nearly eight months later, Dufner walked off the 18th green Friday at the Masters and saw his name atop the leaderboard.

Despite a bogey from the bunker on his last hole, he shot a 2-under 70 and shared the lead with Fred Couples.

"I had some really nice rounds at the PGA," Dufner said. "Didn't quite work out, but carried over into this year. It gave me confidence that I can compete and play at a high level out here and do really nice things."

Dufner has done a lot of nice things over the last few years, which explains why he is No. 31 in the world ranking. He just hasn't done anything to distinguish himself — like winning. The Masters is his 162nd start on the PGA Tour; and the 35-year-old from Alabama remains the only player in the top 50 who has never won on any recognized tour around the world.

Dufner is not likely to get much recognition at Augusta National, except for the Southern fans crying out "War Eagle" to salute his days at Auburn. He shared the lead with Couples, one of the most popular figures at the Masters, if not all of golf.

Everything about Couples looks cool.

Dufner looks like he doesn't have a pulse. With a plug of tobacco jutting from his lower lip, he shows no emotion over a birdie or bogey. He decided to take a rest going into the Masters and didn't even come to the course on Wednesday. It sounded like an exciting day.

"I just hung out at the house," he said. "I had a couple of errands, picked up some dry cleaning, had to send something off. Watched the History Channel a good bit."

He tries to keep it simple on the golf course, too.

"I know the situation, and I'm playing a major; I'm playing at Augusta in the Masters," Dufner said. "As a player, I know everything that's going on. At times, I know that I am leading or behind or whatever it might be in that situation. I'm just trying to have a nice round of golf, play well, commit to my shots and let the rest take care of itself."

That seems to have worked the first two days.

Dufner's meltdown was surprising in the PGA Championship just down the highway at Atlanta Athletic Club. He hit into the water on the 15th and scrambled for bogey, missed the green on the 16th for another bogey and three-putted the 17th for bogey.

What he remembers from that day was that he needed par on the 18th hole to force a playoff, and that's what he did. Keegan Bradley wound up beating him in the three-hole playoff.

three holes, but gave that all back and more. He shot 3-over 75 and was at 3 over for the tournament, closer to the cut line of 5 over than the lead.

Last year, he was seven back it came back to briefly grab the lead on Sunday before finishing fourth.

"One of the neat things about this tournament is the 10-shot rule," Woods said, referring to the rule that brings all players within 10 of the lead back for the weekend. "Anyone can win the golf tournament who makes the cut. Guys have won this from five, six down going into the back nine. I just need to be solid, cut that deficit down and get off to a quick start like I did last year on Sunday."

Couples got off to a quick start Friday, shooting a 3-under 33 on the front nine to move into contention. Two years ago, he opened with a 66 and became the oldest player to hold the outright lead after the first round at Augusta. Last year, he shot 68 on Friday to push his way into the top 10.

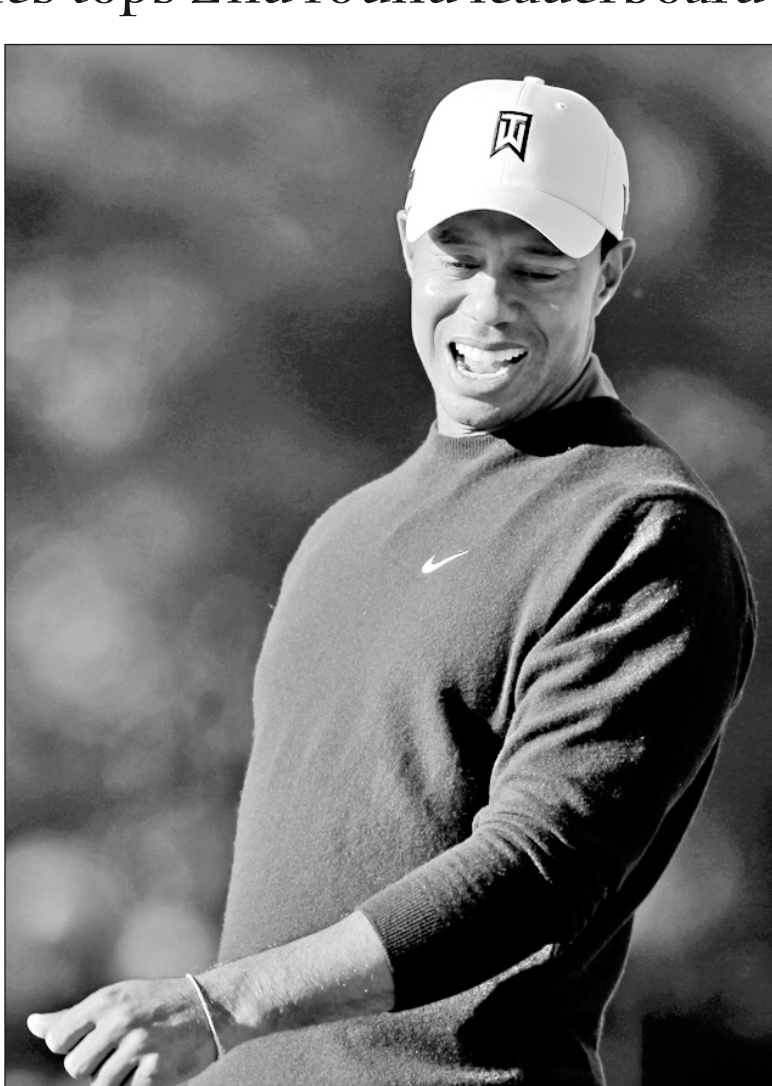

This time, he heads into the weekend with a chance to become the oldest major winner. He's six years older than Jack Nicklaus was when he won his sixth Masters on that unforgettable Sunday in 1986. Twenty players in the field weren't even born when Couples played his first Masters back in 1983.

Still, he's hardly the only big name near the top.

Sergio Garcia shot a 4-under 68 to finish one shot back, tied with Rory McIlroy, who shot 69, and Bubba Watson, who shot 71.

"I know I'm playing well," said McIlroy, who overcame last year's final-round collapse at the Masters and won the U.S. Open two months later. "The recent results show that. I just wanted to come here and play, put myself in position to win another tournament, another major."

Also in the tie at 4 under were 2010 British Open champion Louis Oosthuizen and Lee Westwood. Westwood spent most of the day in the lead, but three-putted on the 18th green for a double-bogey to close his day at Tiger Woods reacts to a missed birdie putt on the 14th hole during the second round of the Masters golf tournament Friday in Augusta, Ga.

1-over 73 and 4 under for the tournament.

"The double at the last (hole) was a disappointing way to finish," Westwood said. "But if you get out of position slightly on this course, it can punish you."

Couples, a winner on the senior tour two weeks ago, often ambles around these grounds, twirling a golf club, looking as if he's playing a leisurely weekend round instead of grinding through one of golf's toughest tests. On this day, his 106th competitive round at the course, all the scenes looked familiar: Freddie bending at the waist to stretch, reaching his hand into the back of his waistband to rub his aching back, squinting into the sunlight, wincing at the occasional twinge of pain.

"What would it take?" he said. "A lot more birdies, a lot more made putts." Maybe a painkiller or two.

He teed off into a fairway bunker on No. 3, but spun the approach back to 5 feet and jammed the putt home for birdie No. 1. He was pin high and 4 feet away on No. 4, and suddenly, Couples was doing more than playing ceremonial golf — something he has always desperately wanted to avoid.

He hit a hybrid into the 15th green to 20 feet and barely missed the eagle putt. When he rolled in a 20-footer on 16 to get to 5 under, he pumped his fist and yelled "Bam."

Garcia lurking at Masters

AUGUSTA, Ga. (AP) — Sergio Garcia was supposed to shed that "best player never to win a major" label years ago.

Yet here he is, 32 and still searching.

The Spaniard climbed into contention at the Masters on Friday with a 4-under 68 that left him a stroke behind the ageless Fred Couples and Jason Dufner. It's only his sixth round in the 60s in 14 trips to Augusta National, and third since 2009.

"I don't know if I'm ready to win. We'll see," Garcia said. "I wish I could tell you I'm ready to win, but I really don't know. So I'm just going to give it my best try, and you know, hopefully that will be good."

Just 19 when he had a spectacular showdown with Tiger Woods at the 1999 PGA Championship, Garcia was supposed to give Woods a fight for the title of greatest player of their generation. But he's never been able to live up to his star billing, with an 0-for-53 record in the majors and a psyche perhaps better suited for a therapist's couch than a major golf championship.

As for his favored status with the fans, which seemed a given when he was a teenager with that catchy "El Nino" nickname, well, he's put that to the test. He whined about rain and unfairness at Bethpage in '02, and gave a middle-finger salute to the rowdy New York fans who christened him "Waggle Boy."

That's not to say he's been a washout — far from it. His wins last year at the Castello and Andalucia Masters gave him 10 victories on the European Tour, and he's got another seven wins on the PGA Tour. He is back up to No. 21 in world rankings after plummeting to No. 85 last year. He's finished in the top 12 at the last three majors.

Of his 17 top-10 finishes in the majors, only two have come at Augusta National, and the last was in 2004. In contention last year after shooting 69-71 in the first two rounds, he blew up Saturday with a 75 and finished tied for 35th.

In the midst of that meltdown, playing partner Angel Cabrera, who won the first of his two major titles a few months shy of his 38th birthday, put an encouraging arm around the younger Garcia and gave him a pep talk.

"He just said, 'Just keep going. Don't worry about it. These things happen. If you keep going the way you're going, you'll be fine. You'll manage to get through one day.' So it was just a nice talk," Garcia recalled Friday. "Obviously, at the time it was nice to hear because it wasn't a great moment for me in that round."

HORSE RACING

Silver Max runs away with Stakes

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — Mark Bacon finally has a graded stakes win as an owner. No doubt his son, Max, is pretty thrilled, too.

Silver Max took an early lead and coasted home for an easy victory in the Grade 3 Transylvania Stakes on Friday at Keeneland.

It was the second straight victory for Silver Max, who was named by Bacon's 10-year-old son and is trained by Dale Romans.

"It's unbelievable," said Bacon, who lives in Louisville and co-owns the horse with Dana Wells. "It's my first stakes win and I just said that Dale and his entire staff have done a tremendous job with him."

Silver Max, a brown colt, also won a starter optional claiming race last month at Gulfstream Park. He finished fifth in the Holy Bull Stakes at Gulfstream on Jan. 29.

"I've always liked him and told Dale, 'He's going to be a nice horse, just take your time with him. He will win a stakes somewhere down the line,'" said Tammy Fox, Romans' long-time partner and exercise rider. "He seems like he's a much better grass horse. You know, I got on him two days ago, I don't go to Florida, this is the first time since he left from Churchill to Florida that I've been on him. He's just matured and just got so much better."

Silver Max, sired by Badge of Silver, had a string of second-place finishes last year before breaking through at Gulfstream in December. He followed that up with his fifth-place finish at the Holy Bull.

"He looks really comfortable to me. All his races on a mile and a sixteenth on the turf have been really impressive," said Bacon, who will be attending his 34th Kentucky Derby this year. "And Badge of Silver (descendants), they seem to be able to run on anything. He seems to have found a home on turf."

Silver Max, ridden by Robby Albarado, finished the 1 1-16 miles on turf in 1:41.81 and won by 5 1/2 lengths. He paid $8.60, $4.20 and $2.80. Travel Advisory returned $6.20 and $4. State of Play finished third, paying $2.80.

"(Silver Max) is a good horse. I wished somebody would go with him," said Manoel Cruz, who rode Travel Advisory. "I believe in my horse. Sit, settle and be quiet. When I made a move he responded a lot, but he was not sufficient to catch the 6."

Monastic, the pre-race favorite, was shifted out five wide leaving the second turn and finished fourth in the six-horse field in front of 23,986 for the opening day of Keeneland's spring meet. Icon Ike finished fifth followed by Wayward Sailor.

None of them came close to challenging Silver Max.

"He has just kept improving since his first race and Dale's had a lot of confidence in him and that gave him a lot of confidence," Bacon said.

COLLEGE BASKETBALL

Kentucky head coach John Calipari celebrates with his team after the NCAA tournament championship game Monday night in New Orleans.

SCHOOLS: UK, Cards look to cash in on success

heard of Murray State," she said. "We can then spend time selling those students on our individual programs."

But it was UK that scored the biggest bragging rights. The school now hopes to convert that into a windfall.

Capilouto, in his first year as UK's president, hobnobbed with donors at the Final Four in New Orleans, where Kentucky defeated Kansas to win the national championship Monday night.

Now he hopes to see a surge in donations and student applications as a result of the heightened national exposure and euphoria among alums and other supporters.

He said he maximized his opportunity to talk up the school and its needs during his time with donors.

"The pride that they share translates into investments on our campus," Capilouto said.

He's also seen the importance of athletics as a recruiting tool in trying to lure top-notch students to the Lexington campus. In the past month, he's talked with about 50 such students who still have UK on their lists.

The school's academic programs were foremost on their minds, he said, but athletics were a factor.

"Almost to a person, they wanted to share that experience you get from big-time college athletics," Capilouto said. "Several of them said to me, 'I can't wait for my first game in Rupp (Arena).'"

Don E. Witt, UK's vice provost for enrollment management and director of undergraduate admission, said the championship should enable UK to garner even more interest from students across the country. Freshman applications to UK have jumped by 51 percent since 2006, and he points to an increase in the ranks of out-of-state students as a leading factor.

He said students want to be "part of a winning tradition" along with the academic programs.

Butler University has seen the benefits of having its basketball team make deep and dramatic runs in the NCAA tournament. The Bulldogs reached the national championship games in 2010 and 2011.

The private school in Indianapolis attracted its largest applicant pool ever when selecting its current freshman class, said Tom Weede, vice president for enrollment management. And for the first time, more than half of the freshman class came from outside Indiana.

Some of it is due to other outreach efforts, but the basketball success was the biggest contributor, he said.

"It built recognition," Weede said. "We just don't have the name recognition that schools like Kentucky and Louisville have."

Having a cw

MARY D. FERGUSON | KENTUCKY NEW ERA
Florence Bond puts the finishing touches on the Easter outfit for Raspberry the cow. Raspberry is a cow statue which was a gift to Florence last Christmas.

Local woman cherishes her cow

Raspberry has already donned her Easter bonnet with all the flowers upon it.

Getting in fancy dress is nothing new for Raspberry, and if you travel Virginia Street, you've probably enjoyed her costumes.

Florence Bond, a registered nurse who works in recovery at Jennie Stuart Medical Center, is the proud owner of Raspberry, a concrete cow that graces the front yard of the Bond home.

Raspberry isn't just a statue. To Florence and her family, she is a reflection of life in a well-known Christian County family that for generations owned prize-winning 4-Star Jersey Cattle.

At the age of 9, Florence, whose parents were Peter and Christine Askew, was given her first Jersey calf by her uncle, Cookie Askew.

The Askews operated a dairy farm in the Barker's Mill community near the Tennessee state line, and Florence was a member of the 4-H club in Montgomery County, Tenn.

That first calf was named Raspberry. A beautiful animal as are all Jersey cows, Raspberry grew up to be a grand champion at the Tennessee State Fair and later won national honors.

Florence and the Inquiring Reporter relate to life with Jersey cattle. Like the Askews, we also had Jerseys and one was given to me because she was a muley (a cow without horns) and she wasn't growing as was expected.

After being given to me, she started to grow, was the best natured cow ever in our herd, and her calves paid for my part of a college education.

Florence and I have fond memories from those days. On one occasion, my cow, Sis, had a calf. At the time, I was sick in bed, and my father brought the little calf and placed it in the bed beside me so I could pet it.

Florence recalls a time when she was showing Raspberry in competition and Raspberry calved there.

"We let the calf nurse and left Raspberry to compete while we took the calf home in the trunk of the car," Florence said.

This past Christmas, Florence's husband, Ken, who had heard her comment about a concrete cow she'd seen and liked, really scored as Santa Claus.

"He managed to slip away and load that concrete cow on a trailer and put her in the front yard on Christmas Eve," Florence said.

"The next morning, he woke me early and insisted I get up to see what Santa Claus had left."

"I looked out the window and said, 'there's my cow' and immediately I named her Raspberry as I remembered that first cow I loved so much," she explained.

Showing cattle goes way back for the family. Florence has a newspaper clipping of her father when he was 5 years old and won a grand champion trophy for a calf he showed when he was a member of a youth cattle club.

As an adult, he continued the family dairy business, and during World War II, his farm furnished milk for soldiers at Fort Campbell.

As a 4-H member, Florence showed cattle and garnered many awards for years, but it was her success with Raspberry that has meant the most.

The Raspberry that now sits in her yard has been dressing for the holidays since she arrived on Christmas Eve.

First, she was decked out for New Years and then Valentine's Day and most recently she sported a University of Kentucky banner and blue and white ribbons which she wore until after Kentucky won the championship.

The Bonds have two grown children, Amy and Kenny, and we asked what they thought of the fashionable cow in their parent's yard.

"Well, I think they may be a bit embarrassed, but they understand," Florence said.

She laughed and related a recent incident when a patient in recovery heard her talking about Raspberry, and the patient said, "Oh, you're the woman with the cow."

"So you see, people know me by my cow, and I just love that cow," she said.

SAALFELD, Germany — You thought Easter eggs don't grow on trees? Check out Volker Kraft's garden in eastern Germany, and think again.

Kraft's apple sapling sported just 18 eggs when he first decorated it for Easter in 1965. The number increased year by year; and by last year, the sturdy tree was festooned with 9,800 eggs, artfully decorated with everything from sequins to sea shells.

This time, Kraft has reached 10,000 — and he says he's stopping there.

"There will be no increase because I do not have storage capacity anymore," the 76-year-old retiree says. "I would have to sleep with the eggs otherwise."

Kraft's tree in the town of Saalfeld has become a tourist attraction, drawing thousands of people every year. Decorating trees with colored eggs at Easter is a tradition in Germany — though usually on a smaller scale.

Kraft started with plastic eggs decades ago, but later switched to real eggs and enlisted his family's help in blowing out the insides of the eggs and painting them.

"You can now see here what develops after 47 years, when the tree grows, the wife blows the eggs and the children start painting," he says.

In this March 2012 image released by Cynthia Leonor Garza, a batch of cascarones are being made at the home of Cynthia Leonor Garza in Washington, D.C. Cascarones are hollowed-out eggs that are dyed, decorated and filled with confetti, then covered with a colorful piece of tissue paper.

CASCARONES IN THE US: Confetti-filled eggs catch on

BY JENNIFER FORKER
FOR THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

For Gloria Lemos, a 65-year-old grandmother living in Pasco, Wash., the family tradition of cracking cascarones over relatives' heads at Easter brings back fond childhood memories of running, laughing ... and seeing elaborate hairdos covered in confetti and egg shells.

Cascarones — hollowed-out eggs filled with confetti or small prizes — go back at least six generations in her Mexican-American family, Lemos says.

"When people weren't looking, you'd go smash them in their nice hairdos and their nice Easter clothes," she recalls. "And it'd make a mess. And that was the fun of it."

The tradition's roots are in Mexico and other Latin American countries, where cascarones (the word means "eggshells" in Spanish) are used for fiestas and other celebrations. Popular for generations as an Easter tradition in the Southwest, they are now making a splash elsewhere in the United States.

Getting hit with a cascarone is supposed to bring good luck.

Lemos' daughter, Tessa Lemos Del Pino of Nashville, Tenn., says the family also incorporated dyed, hard-boiled Easter eggs in their Easter festivities.

"We had a large family, and we'd have this great big hunt in the back yard," she says. "It'd erupt in complete chaos. It was a time when the kids and the adults really played together."

To make cascarones, eggs are emptied, cleaned, colored (often using Easter egg dye kits), allowed to dry, then filled with confetti. The egg hole is sealed with colorful tissue paper.

It makes for a lot of scrambled eggs, says Lemos, and other dishes.

In her day, the process took a lot of time, which was the point, she says.

"Especially when you were poor," says Lemos. "It kept us (kids) busy."

Every family had its own cascarone-decorating traditions, with some drawing elaborate images in crayon.

"Can you imagine an empty egg shell, and trying to make a pretty decoration on it?" asks Lemos. "Yeah, we had a lot of fun with those."

Lemos Del Pino hasn't continued the tradition with her own two children - her son has an egg allergy - but other Moms are carrying on the cascarone tradition. And they blog about it.

Roxana A. Soto, of Denver, launched the bilingual blog SpanglishBaby with a college friend in 2009. She posted about cascarones this time last year. Soto is Peruvian and didn't have cascarones as a child, but she's adopted the craft for her two young children.

"I do know I want them to grow up with the Latino culture engrained," says Soto.

Her kids enjoyed making and smashing cascarones last year. "The actual activity - doing the craft - is fun," says Soto.

For those who want the fun of the smash but not the mess of the craft, cascarones are sold in stores throughout the Southwest, in California and elsewhere. They're sold online at sites such as Amols, a party favor store, and in several Etsy.com shops.

Yvonne Castaneda is vice president of Silly Rabbit Confetti Eggs, a San Antonio, Texas, company that sells confetti-filled eggs to regional and national stores, such as Walmart and Walgreens, in the Southwest. The product is inching north, says Castaneda, as the cascarone craze catches on.

How to make cascarones:

It's similar to dyeing hard-boiled eggs, with a few extra steps:

1. Cut a hole in one end of the egg and dump out the egg.
2. Clean the shells; sanitize them with a bleach-and-water mixture if you like.
3. Color shells with bright Easter egg dye or food coloring.
4. Further decorate, if you like, with glitter, crayons and stickers.
5. Once the eggs are dry, fill them with confetti. (Extend the fun by having kids make their own confetti, using a hole punch.)
6. Cover the shell hole with tissue paper and a glue paste made from flour and water.
7. Eat a mess of scrambled eggs.

Sexual identification creates dilemma

DEAR AMY: For a little over six months, I've been having a sort of internal struggle about my sexuality.

About six weeks ago that struggle came to an end, and I have since decided to identify myself as bisexual. I have told four of my closest friends (who are totally fine with it), and I plan on being a few more in the future. The thing is, I don't want to tell my parents.

My parents are pro-gay and we have gay family members - but I just think they'll make a much bigger deal out of it than they should. I worry they'd say "Oh, it's not a problem if you're bisexual," but be concerned about it all the time.

My friends agree that I shouldn't tell my parents yet, and I suppose it's not an issue since I haven't started dating.

But they are my parents and they do have the right to know at some point. But when is that "some point"? — Wondering

DEAR WONDERING: You don't say how old you are and so it's challenging for me to assign a perfect moment for you to disclose this to your parents. In fact, there is no perfect moment.

I do know this, however: You cannot control how your folks will react. You cannot accurately predict what they will say to you versus what they will be thinking.

Parents worry. Worry is built into the job description.

Whatever moment you choose won't erase their concern about you, because regardless of your sexuality they want you to be healthy, happy and secure.

Don't wait until you are in a relationship, however. Disclosing your sexuality at the same time you are enveloped in a romance may be too much information to handle all at once.

I give you credit for struggling to find your authentic self and for being so thoughtful about how to handle it.

DEAR AMY: My husband says that looking at personals' notices online isn't a big deal and that lots of married people do it.

I never knew he did this until I saw that he responded to a woman asking how he could contact her because she didn't leave a number.

I am very hurt by this and don't buy my husband's explanation that he was just trying to educate her that she needs to leave a number if she wants responses. There was nothing in his reply to suggest that he was joking around.

Our argument stems from why he was looking at personals to begin with. I know lots of men (and some women) look at pornography but to me personals are intended for people looking to meet other people personally.

My husband says I'm overreacting.

What do you think? — Takes It Personally

DEAR TAKES IT: Your husband is trying to gaslight you.

Do you peruse the personals and communicate with strangers? Would your husband mind it if you did? I don't know many married people who do this openly and with impunity.

The fact that your husband is open about this means that he is testing the waters and can't even bother to be sneaky. You need to discuss this. Your husband can't just declare what is "normal" and then have you accept it. A marriage counselor could help you sort this out by serving as a reality check for both of you.

DEAR AMY: I'm replying to the letter from "Wondering," who was bothered because a couple celebrating their anniversary charged admission.

Here in Manitoba, Canada, what this person is describing is called a "social." This tradition starts with a "wedding social" for the couple about to get married. Then 25 years later, you have the "25th anniversary social." Wondering should attend and they will see how much fun these events are! — "Social" Butterfly

DEAR BUTTERFLY: I looked up "wedding social" and read about this unique fundraising event. I am also familiar with the practice of charging admission for a celebration party.

How acceptable you find this may depend on where you are from.

Get your kids up and moving

Today children are heavier than they were a decade ago. Children spend more time watching TV and playing on the computer than they spend outdoors. On average, children spend three hours a day in front of the TV. If time spent on videos, DVDs, computers and video games are added in, screen time increases to about six hours a day.

Children who spend more time in front of the TV tend to be heavier. This is because little energy is used while watching TV and many children snack on high-calorie foods such as crackers, chips and cookies while they watch TV and play computer games.

With this being the start of spring break, it is a good time to change habits. Parents and guardians should encourage children to get the recommended 60 minutes of exercise each day. When parents take part in exercise, they act as role models and set a positive example for their children to follow. Taking a walk as a family after dinner or playing active games such as soccer, football and basketball together is a great way to have fun and develop the family bond. Make exercise a priority in your family's daily routine.

Other ways to encourage physical activity in children are to:

■ Teach children the benefits of being physically active. Let children know that by being physically active, they will have more energy.

■ Take exercise to the community. Participate in community-wide exercise opportunities such as basketball, volleyball, tennis, golf, walking or even dancing such as Zumba.

■ Make exercise fun for everyone. The key is to find out what children like and add these activities to your child's life. It is also important to add new ways to exercise such as hiking and rock climbing.

April marks the nation's Month of the Military Child, a time to honor youth impacted by deployment. In celebration, Kentucky Operation: Military Kids, part of the Family and Consumer Sciences Extension department at the University of Kentucky, invites you to join them for the annual Purple UP! For Military Kids on Friday.

Everyone across the state is encouraged to wear purple on this day as a visible way to show support and thank military children for their strength and sacrifices. Purple is the color that symbolizes all branches of the military, as it is the combination of Army green, Coast Guard blue, Air Force blue, Marine red and Navy blue. OMK hopes everyone will take this opportunity to appreciate and celebrate these young heroes. The goal is for military youth to see the support of their community.

Recognize hazardous trees

Trees are very beneficial in urban landscapes. However, they can also be destructive. Straight line winds and other unfavorable weather conditions should concern homeowners with large trees. By learning to recognize the warning signs that stressed, weakened trees typically show, it is possible to plan proper actions to manage the risk of tree failure.

GARDEN CORNER

KELLY R. JACKSON

Tree failure occurs when a tree or large part of a tree breaks and falls. Factors such as species, planting site and current condition influence the relative hazard of the tree. Other factors include:

- Tree age — Every tree species has an inherent lifespan and risk of failure increases with age. Longevity should be considered when evaluating existing tree hazards or selecting species to plant.

- The environment — Where a tree lives will also determine its hazard potential. Trees growing on rock ledges or near a body of water often have shallow root systems and are more subject to wind throw.

- Changed Conditions — Trees recently exposed by the removal of neighboring trees are more susceptible to damaging winds.

- Disease — Decay in trees, caused by fungi and often noted by conks or mushrooms, are a major cause of tree failure. Other signs of decay may include cracks, dead branch stubs and the swelling of the trunk.

- Wounds and cankers — These are tree defects that represent weak points in the trunk and are a common point of breakage in prevailing winds.

- Crown dieback — Insect defoliation, drought or soil compaction can put stress on trees. However, trees will often recover if the stress is eliminated in time. Trees with advanced crown decline will die and should be removed.

- Structural problems — Leaning or lopsided trees may represent a hazard if they are above a target. Generally trees that lean more than 15 degrees from vertical should be removed. Trees with V-shaped forks are weak compared to broader angled forks and, during ice storms or high winds, are more prone to breakage.

- Construction — Grading and trenching are especially damaging to tree roots. The probability of failure increases as the amount of the root damage increases. If 50 percent of a tree's root system is damaged, it should probably be removed. Wounds created during construction can cause problems several years after the construction project is complete. Above-ground clues to poor root conditions include thin crowns, off-color leaves, stunted growth, soil compaction, erosion, construction activity, soil fill around the tree, discolored or resin-soaked wood at the root collar and fruiting bodies of root rot fungi growing at or near the base of the trees.

- Applying corrective steps to save large trees or prevent problems requires action. Inspect your trees twice yearly, once in winter and once in summer. Examine the tree from the root zone to the crown, noting anything that may indicate a potential hazard. Document your observations to help keep track of tree health.

If you have a hazardous tree, keep in mind that you may be responsible for any damage it causes if it falls. Documenting the condition of your trees can be important in case of litigation involving the failure of a tree. Use common sense in deciding which trees should be removed. Although it is always preferable to save trees where practical, dead or dying trees within the range of a target should be removed.

Floriade world horticultural expo opens in Holland

ASSOCIATED PRESS

In this photo taken March 30, a tulip field is seen during a preview for the media at Floriade, the once-in-a-decade world horticultural exposition in Venlo, southern Netherlands.

group of reporters previewing the grounds in late March, even as hundreds of workmen struggle to complete structures that will house the plants that are still arriving by the truckload: When one field of bulbs has begun to fade, gardening SWAT teams will toil through the night to uproot and replace them.

In addition, whole gardens of perennials have been planted in such a way that new blooms will unfold in different patterns and rippling colors as spring makes way for summer and fall.

Floriade runs through Oct. 7 and is counting on upward of 2 million visitors from the Netherlands and Germany alone, plus gardening aficionados, flower fans, and businesspeople in smaller numbers from every corner of the world.

Arriving visitors can get an overview of the massive scale of the grounds by taking a gondola ride over the treetops, looking down on the splashes of color and eccentric buildings far below.

Chia seeds: Not just for 'fur' on clay critters

(AP) — After decades adorning everything from a zoo-worthy collection of clay critters to presidential busts, ch-ch-ch-chia seeds finally are ready to ditch the kitsch.

Because in recent years these tiny black seeds have gone from an as-seen-on-TV punch line to a must-have ingredient in the natural foods world, taking starring roles in smoothies, health drinks, energy bars, crackers, cereal, granola, even pasta.

"People think 'chia' in the U.S. and they think 'green hair on a terra cotta figurine,'" said Peter Georgii, new product manager for San Francisco-based Joseph Enterprises Inc., which created the Chia Pet in 1981 and recently released an edible seed product. "What's becoming known now is the benefits to your diet."

Packed with omega-3 fatty acid — more than flax seed — along with fiber, calcium and antioxidants, the native Mexican seed is being touted by runners, yoga moms and all manner of other health conscious eaters.

Sales of edible chia have skyrocketed during the past two years, retailers and specialty food experts say, driven at least in part by an overall growing interest in so-called ancient grains, such as quinoa and amaranth.

Bob's Red Mill, a national grain seller based in Milwaukie, Ore., began carrying chia in 2009. Sales last year saw quadruple growth, said vice president of sales Robert Agnew, and already show signs of continued growth this year.

Joseph Enterprises began selling edible seeds in a few hundred CVS and Walgreens drug stores last year, Georgii said, and now sells them in thousands of stores, as well as online.

"In the last year, they've really jumped in popularity," said Kara Nielsen, trend analyst with California-based product developer CCD Innovation, who first identified chia's trend potential in 2006. She credits recent publicity from television health gurus, athletes and online chatter with fueling the popularity.

"When you start having these different groups, you're talking about a lot of people," Nielsen said.

"The press will also keep rippling this out and it will get broader and broader."

Health food aficionados have likely known about chia since the mid-2000s, when people such as natural health personality Dr. Andrew Weil first began talking about them. Runners got on board thanks to the 2009 book "Born to Run" by Christopher McDougall, which credited the seeds as a source of sustenance for Mexico's Tarahumara Indians, who run hundreds of miles.

"It really can be traced to that book," said Joanna Golub, senior editor at Runner's World magazine. "That's when a wider audience of runners became aware of it. It's always been on the fringe, but that's when it came up on the radar for all sorts of runners."

The seeds — which resemble poppy seeds — have become an especially popular addition to drinks. That's because when soaked in water, the seeds develop a gelatinous coating, giving them the texture of tapioca. Add them to a drink and the result is similar to Japanese bubble tea — a thick beverage full of floating, jelly-like balls.

They are a common addition to kombucha, a popular health drink. And Empellon, an upscale Mexican restaurant in New York, even featured them in a cocktail.

"It adds a cool texture that's definitely an acquired taste," says Christine Muhlke, executive editor of Bon Appetit magazine, who abandoned flax for chia. "And it gives that little halo of health."

Oh, and as for the Chia Pets? They haven't gone anywhere. They flood into stores during the holidays and are available all year online. And Georgii says sales today are sometimes even stronger than in the heyday of "Chia Guy" and "Chia Ram."

But seeds — the ones you eat — are the future.

"Dietary chia will outpace the Chia Pet," Georgii said. But he warns not to go pilfering from the pet's packet. Those seeds aren't grown, packed, stored or quality checked for human consumption. "People should not eat the seeds sold in the pets," he says.

As if.

Chia seeds add crunch to sweet lemon cookie

(AP) — Chia seeds aren't just for growing "fur" on clay critters anymore.

These high-protein, high-fiber seeds also can add a deliciously nutty crunch to baked goods, including these easy glazed lemon cookies. Also try adding them to bread, salads, pesto, granola and yogurt.

Glazed lemon chia cookies

Start to finish: 45 minutes
Makes 24 cookies
1 cup granulated sugar
Zest of 1 lemon
1/2 cup (1 stick) unsalted butter, room temperature
1/4 teaspoon salt
1/2 teaspoon baking powder
1 egg
4 tablespoons lemon juice, divided
2 cups all-purpose flour
1/4 cup chia seeds
1 cup powdered sugar

Heat the oven to 375 F. Line 2 baking sheets with parchment paper or coat them with cooking spray.

In a food processor, pulse together the sugar and lemon zest until the lemon zest is thoroughly incorporated.

In the bowl of an electric mixer, combine the lemon sugar, butter, salt and baking powder. Beat until light and fluffy. Add the egg and beat until thoroughly incorporated. Stir in 2 tablespoons of the lemon juice, then the flour.

Divide the dough into about 24 walnut-size balls, rolling them smooth.

Place the chia seeds in a small bowl. With the palm of your hand, flatten each ball of dough until it is 1/4 inch thick and about 2 inches wide. Dip one side of each flattened cookie in the chia seeds to coat. Arrange the cookies, chia side up, on the prepared baking sheets.

Bake for 10 to 12 minutes, or until lightly golden around the edges. Allow to cool for 5 minutes on the baking sheets before transferring to a rack to cool completely.

Meanwhile, in a small bowl mix the remaining 2 tablespoons of lemon juice with the powdered sugar. Adjust the consistency with more sugar or lemon juice as needed to make a thick glaze that can still be drizzled. Drizzle over the tops of the cookies. Allow to set. Store in an airtight container at room temperature.

Gardeners need a sense of humor

(AP) — Let's pay homage to humor. As the garden gets into full swing, it's a good time for such tribute, because enthusiasm can be parlayed into action.

No one can say exactly what humor (pronounced HUE-mus) is because it's a witch's brew of thousands of organic compounds that result from the decomposition of dead plants and animals.

"Yuck," you say? Don't. Think of compost, leaf mold, the spongy, dark layer of earth you see when you push aside leaves on the forest floor. Think of the rich, dark soils of our Midwestern plains, the Argentine pampas, the Russian steppes. Such soils have been the breadbaskets of the world because they are rich in humus.

Take steps to preserve this 'black gold'

Humus is one of those few things in life that you — your soil, rather — cannot get too much of. Although it's naturally present in all soils, if you garden you have to conscientiously preserve and augment humus.

This is because many garden activities hasten humus decomposition. Not that humus decomposition is all bad; many of humus' benefits, such as release of plant nutrients, come about as humus decomposes. But when humus loss outstrips its accumulation, it's like taking money out of a bank faster than you put it in.

Tilling the soil and using concentrated nitrogen fertilizers accelerate humus decomposition. Tillage charges the soil with air, causing microbial populations to soar, and these hungry microbes then gobble up humus very quickly. Following an initial burst of nutrients, the soil is left poorer. Concentrated nitrogen fertilizers have a similar effect, so go easy on both tillage and concentrated fertilizers.

You can and should add humus to your soil. Grow it in place by setting aside part of your garden or part of the season to cover crops, which are plants grown specifically for soil improvement. Grassy plants, such as oats, rye, sorghum and wheat, are best for increasing soil humus.

And haul humus or the makings of humus into your garden in the form of compost, straw, leaves, wood chips and other bulky plant materials. Just lay these materials on top of the ground and the goodness will naturally work its way down. You'll also get mulch's benefits, which include locking moisture in the soil, preventing wide swings in soil temperatures and snuffing out weeds.

Gray hair's in fashion, but what about at work?

NEW YORK (AP) — Jeanne Thompson began going gray at 23. She colored her hair for years as she worked her way into management at a large Boston-area financial services company, then gave up the dye for good about a year ago.

The earth didn't shake, and the 44-year-old Thompson was promoted to top management the following year.

She is among a new type of gray panther, a woman who aspires to do well and get ahead on the job while happily maintaining a full head of gray.

"Women put pressure on themselves to color," the Exeter, N.H., woman said. "It's a bold statement to be gray because it's saying, 'You know what? I did let my hair go, but I'm not letting myself go.' People take me more seriously now. I never apologize for the gray hair."

But not everyone finds it so easy.

Laws, of course, exist to ward off discrimination in the workplace, yet legions of men and women have no interest in letting their gray fly. Not now, when the struggling economy has produced a stampede of hungry young job-seekers.

But gray heads have been popping up on runways and red carpets, on models and young celebrities for months. There's Lady Gaga and Kelly Osbourne — via dye — and Hollywood royalty like Helen Mirren, the Oscar-winning British actress.

Christine Lagarde, the International Monetary Fund chief, is one of the most powerful women in the world, and she keeps her hair gray. So does Essie Weingarten, founder and now creative director of the nail polish company Essie Cosmetics.

For regular working women, it's a trickier issue.

"I don't think a woman in the workplace is going to follow that trend," David Scher, a civil rights attorney in Washington, said with a laugh. "I think women in the workplace are highly pressured to look young. If I were an older working person, the last thing I would do is go gray."

Yes, he's a dude, and at 44 he has virtually no salt in his hair, but he wasn't alone in issuing a warning against workplace gray for women.

"While the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967 was created to protect employees 40 years of age and older, some men and women may still encounter ageism in the workplace," said Stephanie Martinez Kluga, a manager for Insperity, a Houston-based company that provides human resources services to small and medium-size businesses.

Most of us can pair one bold color with another — it just takes a little confidence. But color-blocking, with contrasting chunks of color, it's more of an art, and it's one to be mastered this spring season.

Colorblocking makes a bold spring style statement

NEW YORK (AP) — Most of us can pair one bold color with another — it just takes a little confidence. But colorblocking, that's more of an art, and it's one to be mastered this spring season.

The highest standard of colorblocking was set by Yves Saint Laurent, who transferred the graphic, pop-art look of painter Piet Mondrian onto fabric. The YSL look was an instant hit as it fit so nicely into the fresh, no-frills mod fashions of the mid-1960s.

Since then, Lisa Perry, known for her bright traffic-stopping color combinations on simple silhouettes, says the style has become a classic that sometimes hits as a bona fide trend. This is one of those years, she says. It's part of a broader movement away from the earth tones that dominated runways and stores for a while.

"I never consider it trendy because we've done it since season one. It happens to be a trend now because things go in cycles, so you'll see it more and more. That's great," Perry says, "but I think it's timeless and always looks good."

A general definition of colorblocking is the pairing of chunks of contrasting colors. Perry likes it all on a single garment — her specialty being a dress — while she calls an outfit of, say, a pink top, red pants and a blue belt more "color mixing." But, she allows, it's a fine line.

Tana Ward, chief merchandising officer for American Eagle, which hopes to ignite this trend among younger shoppers who can be fearless when it comes to color rules, likes to see a rainbow of layers: a bandeau, a tank top over it and then the anorak or hoodie.

"I love when the colors are unexpected, when they're opposites of the color spectrum. ... There aren't a lot of rules. A lot of mixing and matching looks very fresh. Cobalt blue and orange, or you can do neon lime and cobalt blue."

How to grab spring fashions without spending big

NEW YORK (AP) — A warm March and a burst of brightly colored spring fashions are the perfect incentives for shoppers looking to update their wardrobes.

This season's trends, ranging from colorful boat shoes to super skinny jeans, are already obvious, and that makes it easier to get good deals. When everyone is selling the same looks, there's more competition. That can lower prices.

"The clearer the fashions, the easier to find a bargain," said Amanda Hallay, assistant clinical professor at fashion college LIM, based in Manhattan.

If you know the style and brand you want, price-comparison apps like eBay's RedLaser can make finding the best deal easier.

And if you're not wedded to any label, sites like shefinds.com offer guides to sales and online coupon codes, along with blogs and photos of what celebrities are wearing, says Dan Grandpre, editor-in-chief of deal aggregator Dealnews.com.

Make sure you follow their favorite stores' Twitter feeds and Facebook pages to get special discounts.

Chasing trends can easily get expensive. Fight that by investing in styles that you will still find appealing even when they're no longer trendy.

"You have to prioritize. If you are going to spend on shoes, you can cheap out on accessories," said Jodi Furman, author of a blog called Livefabulless.com, which offers tips on smart spending.

Divorce expo counterpoint to the wedding industry

NEW YORK (AP) — Liz Slayback can trace her decision to pursue a divorce to a precise, painful moment. "I knew my marriage was over and the divorce proceedings were about to begin when I came home and I found my husband in bed with my two best friends," said the 33-year-old dental hygienist from Staten Island. How do we know that? Because Slayback declared it so in a video recording booth set up by Huffington Post during a rare, two-day event — an "expo" for people just starting divorce proceedings, in the middle of looking to rise from the ashes in the aftermath. Slayback, positively bubbly after a fancy but free haircut, was among about 300 people to attend "Start Over Smart" last weekend, most of whom were women. A smattering of vendors set up booths offering everything from a divorce planning binder to advice on long-term insurance, with seminars on such topics as "Sensuality Secrets" and "My Formerly Hot Life."

Non-Jewish couples embrace the faith for weddings

NEW YORK (AP) — Jessie Engelman and her fiance plan to wed later this year in Jamaica, where they'll sign a ketubah, the traditional Jewish marriage contract. Soon after, they'll host a pig roast in her tiny Iowa hometown. Neither bride nor groom is Jewish, nor are they evangelical Christians looking to honor their biblical connections to the faith. "My mom and my grandparents had never heard of a ketubah. ... After we explained it they thought it was really cool," said the 31-year-old Engelman, a quality assurance manager from Nyack, N.Y. "We love the spirit of it."

PEOPLE BRIEF

Alec Baldwin goes Twitter-ballistic for fiancée

NEW YORK (AP) — When it comes to his 28-year-old fiancée, Alec Baldwin is very protective. He used Twitter to blast a New York newspaper for "crashing" yoga instructor Hilaria Thomas' class. He tweeted Monday: "Shame on the no-talent trash from the Daily News for invading the privacy of 75 people in a yoga class to take a picture of someone."

Cancun: Spring break on despite tourist unease

CANCUN, Mexico (AP) — Tinkling drinks in hand, New Yorkers Lauren Levy and Jacob Schum settle onto lounge chairs a few feet from the Caribbean's lapping waves. Levy adjusts her yellow bikini. Schum smooths his blue Bermuda shorts. They smile at each other and sigh softly.

"I've never seen turquoise water like this before. It's a beautiful thing," Schum says.

The couple had heard of Mexico's cartel killings, casino firebombs, bribery and corruption. But like millions of other Americans craving a break this spring, these workaholics couldn't resist the low prices, flowing drinks and sunny, 80-degree escape.

"We know not to leave the resort, drink the water or eat the vegetables," says Levy. "We arranged for a shuttle from the airport, we wouldn't get in a taxi. And yeah, we feel safe."

Plus they got a great deal, adds Levy: Just $1,500 for five days, four nights — food, drinks, airfare, transportation, everything.

While American tourism to Mexico slipped 3 percent last year, the country remains by far the biggest tourist destination for Americans, with about 20 million U.S. visitors a year, according to annual survey of bookings by the largest travel agencies. It's as if the entire populations of New York City, Los Angeles, Houston, Philadelphia and Phoenix all went to Mexico for vacation each year.

And for those Americans who do stay away, it appears that it's also finances, not just violence, that's to blame. The U.S. Department of Commerce reports that the economic recession forced 4 percent fewer Americans to travel abroad in 2011 compared with 2010.

While some can't afford the trip, others do stay home out of fear.

The U.S. State Department warns of "gun battles in broad daylight" as Mexican drug dealers fight to control the lucrative trade in marijuana, cocaine and methamphetamine that reaps an estimated $25 billion in U.S. sales each year.

Mexican officials say 47,515 people were killed in narcotics-related violence in Mexico between Dec. 1, 2006, and Sept. 30, 2011. Most were people involved in the drug trade, but the number of U.S. citizens murdered in Mexico increased from 35 in 2007 to 120 in 2011.

Certain areas are more dangerous than others, the State Department says. Tourists are advised to stay near resorts and not to travel at night in the resorts of Acapulco and Mazatlan, for example. And in February, 22 Carnival Cruise Lines passengers were robbed at gunpoint during a shore excursion near the Mexico seaside resort of Puerto Vallarta.

Cancun, however, has remained relatively unscathed. And millions of Americans still come, especially during spring break, when the town becomes a weeks-long party.

Mexican and U.S. law enforcement officials say the region is relatively free of violence because trafficking in the area is controlled almost exclusively by just one cartel, the Zetas, a brutal and high-tech gang founded by rogue Mexican Army special forces who deserted their units and entered the drug trade. In contrast to many other areas of Mexico, the Zetas are virtually uncontested in Cancun, Latin America security analyst

Samuel Logan says.

"The area is safe because Los Zetas control the area and are too dug in for their rivals to fight them for it," he said in an email.

Logan said the cartel maintains control over the region by shaking down business owners, forcing them to pay for "protection" or risk attacks. He said the cartel likely has far more weapons and power than local law enforcement, and that they're likely paying off politicians and police.

"Extortion is the name of the game," said security consultant Walter McKay in Mexico City.

McKay said going to bars, buying drugs or getting involved in illicit activity would put a tourist at great risk in Mexico. But he said it's a safe vacation for the multitudes of bikini-clad visitors who have a singular goal when they reach the numerous resort cities that dot the east and west coasts: to lie on the beach with a beer and a taco.

Other Americans come south to visit family or travel on business. But the draw of sunshine, low prices and close flights are — for many in need of a vacation — the key, irresistible combination. And Cancun, with miles of all-inclusive luxury resorts, is the top tourism spot in Mexico. Tens of thousands of bell boys, concierges, clerks, cooks, security guards and housemaids in starched uniforms here depend on the tourist dollars to send their children to school, put food on the table, take care of their elderly.

Movie, centennial return Canada town to spotlight

HALIFAX, Nova Scotia (AP) — Among the graves of Fairview Lawn Cemetery, there is one that was a magnet for bouquets and weeping girls in the 1990s. The name on the tombstone: J. Dawson.

Jack Dawson, you will recall, is the name of the character played by Leonardo DiCaprio in the 1997 film "Titanic." And this cemetery is the final resting place of more victims of the Titanic than any other.

Now, with the movie's re-release in 3D and the upcoming 100th anniversary of the disaster, keepers of the cemetery expect more flowers, love notes and more weeping — though James Cameron, the film's director, has said there's no connection between his Jack Dawson and the J. Dawson buried here.

This is a place that has a deep connection to the tragedy. Halifax is 700 miles west of the spot where the ocean liner hit an iceberg; the ships bringing bodies back to land arriving starting late in April. Families came to claim the remains of their loved ones, and funerals and memorial services followed. Altogether, 150 of the Titanic's dead are buried in three cemeteries.

Gerry Lunn, curator of Halifax's Maritime Museum of the Atlantic, said this city was in mourning for months after the disaster, with much of its downtown draped in black bunting. "This was not just a one-night story," he said. "It may have been for the ship and the victims, but for Halifax this story went on for months and months and hasn't ended to this day."

On April 15, the anniversary of the sinking, a candlelight procession will be followed by an interfaith memorial service at Fairview Lawn; flares will be set off at the time the ship began sinking; and the Nova Scotia provincial government will tweet the Titanic's final emergency messages.

The Five Fishermen Restaurant and Grill — housed in the building where a funeral home handled the bodies of wealthier victims such as millionaire John Jacob Astor — is offering an April menu inspired by the Titanic's first-class fare.

And the maritime museum is mounting an exhibit of pictures and stories of the 150 Titanic victims buried in Halifax graveyards — 19 in the Catholic Mount Olivet Cemetery, 10 in the Jewish Baron de Hirsch Cemetery, and 121 in nondenominational Fairview Lawn.

ASK A DESIGNER

Embrace your inner sports parent

(AP) — It starts with a lacrosse stick and cleats by the front door. Then comes the batting helmet and glove on the bedroom floor, and the baseball hat on the kitchen table. Karate uniforms pile up in the laundry room next to team jerseys, and errant tennis balls roll down the hall.

Can we get through the spring and summer sports seasons without our homes ending up in total disarray?

Interior designer Betsy Burnham, founder of Burnham Design in Los Angeles, says nearly every home remodeling project she works on these days includes a mudroom with one priority: storing and organizing sports equipment.

Here, she and interior design experts Brian Patrick Flynn of decor demon.com and Kyle Schuneman of Live Well Designs offer tips on handling all this gear without sacrificing style, even when you don't have a mudroom.

BEGIN WITH WORKFLOW

Your system for handling sports clothing, says Schuneman, can be as simple as "two color-coded baskets by the back door or the laundry room: one for dirty, one for clean. Make it a habit to immediately put your uniforms in the dirty basket after the game," he says. "Once it's out of the wash, you fold it and put it in the clean basket," rather than putting it away with other clothing in a bedroom.

For a dose of style, use colorful woven baskets rather than typical plastic hamper or laundry bins. Just make sure the youngest kids can easily reach their items.

"Once you train yourself to this habit, it will be a natural," Schuneman says, and the stress of searching for a team jersey before a game will be history. The key is sticking to the system and putting things in their place.

CHOOSE ONE LOCATION FOR GEAR

You don't need a huge space for sports gear, and it doesn't have to be in or near a child's bedroom. "Often people are challenged for space," Burnham says. Any spot works: "It can be a little area under the stairs or one area of your entryway," as long as it's dedicated to sports stuff.

One option is revamping part of your garage, Burnham says. Rather than using plastic storage bins and old boxes, outfit this space with vintage metal containers refurbished with fresh paint, or large baskets with lids. The summer sports season "can be a great reason to give your garage a facelift," Burnham says, using storage that is sturdy but attractive.

Or spend a Saturday cleaning out an entryway closet, then add hooks and baskets for sports items. You may have more space available than you think.

Dog Scouts of America have troops in 22 states

LOS ANGELES (AP) — They've got badges and campouts, cookie drives and troops in 22 states. The Dog Scouts of America even has a motto or two as the half-human, half-hound organization goes about the business of doing good deeds.

One of the first badges for Jasper, a 3-year-old collie-Lab mix, was disaster preparedness. After all, he lives with Robert and Misti Verdahl in Milpitas, southeast of San Francisco, where you have to be aware of earthquakes and other natural disasters.

Jasper and his humans belong to Troop 198 in Santa Clara and have earned 18 badges altogether. Each, the humans said, has made him a better dog.

"We go outside and I know he's going to be safe," Verdahl said. "If there's an emergency, I know he will listen to me."

There are 682 Dog Scouts who belong to 38 troops across the country. The organization has around 80 badges, but not all dogs can earn all badges, said DSA President Chris Puls of Brookville, Ind.

One of her dogs, a 3-year-old Malinois named Dazzle, is 24 inches high and had to jump twice his height to get his jumping badge, for instance. Long or heavy dogs aren't really suited to that.

"If it's not safe, we don't want you trying for it," Puls said.

Dogs are not required to earn badges beyond the first one, for basic obedience and appropriately called the Dog Scout badge.

The organization was founded by Lonnie Olson 13 years ago. Membership is $25 a year.

Kozette, Olson's boxer mix nicknamed "Kozi," is a model Scout with about 45 badges.

Community service is part of any good Scout program, Olson said. The DSA members make about $10,000 a year for The Salvation Army and participate in several Christmas projects. Most troops also work with local groups to do whatever is needed in their hometowns.

Olson's 80-acre St. Helen, Mich., property is converted into one of numerous weeklong camps every summer. Puls is a former police officer who teaches and certifies badges at all the camps.

She has three dogs who have earned 122 badges between them. One, a 12-year-old cattle dog named Coyote, is retired with 48 badges.

Because cattle dogs often go deaf, Puls and Coyote worked hard on the sign language badge. Then Coyote went blind instead of deaf.

More than a decade ago, the Scouts decided to sell human-grade, dog-safe cookies, she said, but the group took a break from cookie sales to streamline operations.

Empty Bowls project fills local stomachs

BY DENNIS O'NEIL
NEW ERA FEATURE WRITER

Cadiz United Methodist Church will host an auction and luncheon for the Empty Bowls Project on April 18. Proceeds from the event will benefit Helping Hands of Trigg County, which provides food and services for the area's poor.

The Empty Bowls Project is an international effort to fight hunger that began in 1991 in Michigan. According to the organization's website, potters and craftspeople handcraft and decorate bowls for the project. A luncheon is later offered where attendees are given a simple meal of bread and soup and asked for a donation. In exchange for their donation, they receive a bowl.

Bowls were decorated at the Janice Mason Art Museum on March 30-31. On April 18, attendees at the luncheon will be asked for a $5 donation. They will later be able to bid on the bowls during a silent auction.

Kathy Tessier, one of the event organizers, said there are 50 bowls up for auction and patrons can bid however much they want. Each bowl was decorated by an individual in the community. Tessier said the number far exceeded her expectations.

Tessier approached Helping Hands about the event, she said. She has been toying with the idea of starting a soup kitchen in Trigg County and wanted to offer the event as a way of gauging the public's interest in donating.

Tessier said they still have 50 other bowls that need to be decorated. She is considering having another event after the luncheon, though she isn't sure if it will benefit Helping Hands or another organization. She first wants to see what type of response they have for the luncheon.

"We are just going with the flow right now," she said.

The luncheon will be from 11:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. The church is at 482 Lakota Drive.

For more information, call 270-522-1177.

Mideast Israel Passover

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Ultra-Orthodox Jewish men gather Thursday to collect water from a water tower to be used in the preparation of matzah, a traditional handmade Passover unleavened bread, in the ultra Orthodox Jewish town of Bnei Brak, near Tel Aviv, Israel. Jews are forbidden to eat leavened food during the Passover holiday. Passover celebrates the biblical story of the Israelites' escape from slavery and exodus from Egypt.

Embrace the hope and joy of Easter

DEAR REV. GRAHAM: I don't believe in life after death. As far as I'm concerned this life is all we've got, and once it's over that's the end. We might as well enjoy life while we can, and stop kidding ourselves into thinking we'll be happier once we die. — Z. McC.

DEAR Z. McC: Tomorrow, millions of Christians all over the world will celebrate the one event in human history that assures us beyond all doubt that there is life beyond the grave: the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead. Jesus said, "Because I live, you also will live" (John 14:19).

Think of it this way: How could we ever know — really know — that death is not the end, but that a more glorious life awaits us after we die? The only way would be for someone to die — and then come back to life and tell us what awaited us after death. And this is what happened with Jesus. His promise came true: "I am going there to prepare a place for you. And if I go ... I will come back and take you to be with me" (John 14:2-3).

MY ANSWER

Hundreds — even thousands — witnessed His death on that Roman cross outside Jerusalem, and observed His body being taken down, after which it was placed in a sealed and guarded stone tomb. But on the third day, the tomb was empty, and during the next 40 days hundreds witnessed His presence. Their lives were changed, because now they knew that when they died they would be in God's glorious presence forever.

Don't go through life without hope, living only for the moment and never understanding why God put you here. Instead, discover the joy that only comes from knowing Christ, as you turn to Him in faith and invite Him to come into your life.

RELIGION BRIEF

Rare Bible now housed at Stevenson University

BALTIMORE (AP) — A rare first edition of the King James Bible is going on display with other rare Bibles at Stevenson University.

The Baltimore Sun reports that the 1611 King James edition and the other books are on loan from the Maryland Bible Society. The public will be able to view them April 12 at the Stevenson library.

The society will still own the Bibles under a long-term agreement with the university, signed last week.

The Bible Society decided that it lacked the space to show off its collection of antique editions. About 175 first-editions of the King James version are known to exist worldwide, and they can sell for six figures.

Also in the collection are an 1807 Bible from Edinburgh, translated into Gaelic, and a 1788 Bible from Nuremberg.

Kingdom Inheritance

HAPPI HOP- Healthy Active Positive People in Christ

RICKEY D. GALBREATH, SR, PASTOR

"Then the King will tell those on his right hand, 'Come, blessed of my Father, inherit the Kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world;'"

— Matthew 25:34

I prepared a kingdom inheritance for you when I created the world.

In this promise, Jesus is telling a story about sheep and goats where the sheep (those who are in Christ) will be welcomed into the everlasting kingdom of our God and Father on that great day. Jesus tells us that the kingdom that we will inherit was prepared for us from the foundation of the world.

You and I may not have a substantial inheritance on this side of heaven from our earthly parents, but when we finish our race and are welcomed into the dwelling place of our God and Father, we will have an everlasting kingdom inheritance waiting for us.

May the reality of this promise encourage each one of us today. We are not poor in the sight of the living God, but are richer than any one of us could possibly imagine.

Because we are sons and daughters to our heavenly Dad... because we are joint-heirs with Jesus (our elder brother) ... because we are the temple of the Holy Spirit... we have an everlasting kingdom inheritance waiting for us. Hallelujah!!!!

CHICKEN SOUP FOR THE SOUL

A new stay-at-home mom finds her groove

BY SHERRIE NAJARIAN

"CHICKEN SOUP FOR THE SOUL: STAY AT HOME MOMS"

Alex, my 2-year-old daughter, cried out for "Binky." Even though I wished we could lose that pacifier forever, I began lifting throw pillows and looking under the sofa. This was my third Binky search-and-rescue mission of the day. One month after becoming a stay-at-home mom, I was ready to throw in the diaper and go back to work as a registered nurse.

I thought being at home would feel like a vacation. Instead, the days were long and isolating. Time flew by at the hospital but I desperately missed my daughter, who stayed with a sitter. My husband's job and long commute made him gone from five in the morning until eight each night. I loved nursing, but something had to give. So I resigned.

Once we found Binky, I took Alex to the playground. It was abuzz with moms and kids. I studied the other moms, looking for clues on how to make this homemaker thing work. Every time a child approached his mother with a need, she reached into her magical diaper bag and pulled out the solution.

I gazed in awe as one mother changed a diaper, never once distracted from telling her story. When done, she pulled out a plastic bag for the refuse, gracefully deposited it in the trash, and then whipped out a small bottle of hand disinfectant. I looked from her ironed clothes to my jelly-stained T-shirt. Jealous, I nicknamed her "Mommy Perfect."

I knew it was obvious to the other mothers — I was really a working mom masquerading as a stay-at-home mom. How could I be so inept at managing a 2-year-old, when I had effectively carried a caseload of more than 40 patients?

I began to accept the unhurried rhythm of my house and daughter. Slowing down gave us the time to do things like read stacks of picture books and take cuddle naps. Still, needing a break by evening, I'd plop Alex in front of the television while I made dinner or caught up on emails. Ashamed at how grateful I was for my TV babysitter, I often wondered, would Mommy Perfect approve? I was still too intimidated to introduce myself. Then came the day Alex gave up her pacifier.

In an effort to get rid of Binky, I suggested Alex wrap it up as an elaborate gift for the newborn down the street. My daughter smiled with delight as she decorated the box with fancy paper and bright-colored bows. She proudly delivered the package to the baby. And that, quite simply, was the end of Binky. Had I only known it was going to be that easy!

Proud of my success, I swaggered to the playground and saw Mommy Perfect. She looked frazzled and wore sweat pants.

"Hi, I'm Jane." Mommy Perfect held out her hand. "Excuse the way I look. Our TV's been out for three days. I'm ready to buy every kid's video ever made so I can take a shower."

"You let your child watch videos?" I blurted out.

"Of course," she said. "How would I ever get dressed in the morning?"

Inside I was relieved. Maybe I was no different than the other stay-at-home moms after all.

"By the way..." Mommy Perfect said as she searched through her purse, "do you have a tissue? My son's nose is disgusting."

"Sure." I reached into my well-stocked diaper bag.

"Thanks. Sam has the worst allergies. He has tons of diet restrictions and is always congested. If I could just get rid of his pacifier it would be so much easier for him to breathe."

Now this was a topic I had a handle on! When the kids scampered off to play with the sand toys I'd brought, I turned to Jane and said, "It's hard to wean kids off pacifiers. But if you want, I'll tell you what worked for me..."
